CENTRAL AMERICA.

It may not be uninteresting at this time to know that Central America comprises an area somewhat larger than the states of Missouri, Illinois and Indiana, Nicaragua alone being about as large as Illinois. The popu-lation is very sparse. Guatemala has 1,252,000; San Salvador, 554,000; Nicaraguan, 275,000; Honduras, 350,-000; Costa Rica, 185,000; Panama, 220,000. The soil is capable of sup-porting ten times this population. The larger portion of the country is forest, the trees being chiefly mahogany, logwood, brazil-wood, live oak, fustic pine, copal-wood, cedar, rosewood, and ironwood. The forests are brilliant with those gorgeous air-flowers, the orchids, and are alive with monkeys. The agricultural products are beans, grain and fruits—bananas, cocoanuts, oranges, plantains, lemons, guavas, pineapples, citrons and limes. Bananas and cocoanuts are easily raised and the yield is enormous. The steamers that ply between Cen-tral American points and New Or-leans usually bring in as cargoes 100,-000 cocoanuts and 25,000 bunches of bananas, which pass through all the hands of Italian and Sicilian fruit merchants in the Crescent city and go to all the Western States. All the bananas and cocoanuts in our Western markets come from Central America. A few Americans are en-gaged in fruit-raising in Honduras and find it profitable. The coffee tree thrives in all the Central American Istates, and ginger, annatto, vanilla, aloes, gums, caoutchouc, copaiba, and other valuable articles of commerce are produced. The country abounds in gold, silver and copper, but the deposits are not worked by the lazy natives, who are content to lead a languid existence without attempting to develop the wealth in their soil and forests. The climate is warm and unbealthful on limate is warm and unhealthful on the coast, but on the highlands in the interior temperate and salubrious; and that it is not altogether unfavorable to enterprise is proved by the vast ruins of cities and temples, the work of a civilized and cultivated people now extinct, at Coban and other places in Guatemala and Honduras. After dinner the friends left and he sat talking with some of the peculiar costumes of foreign nations. The fashion, however, was costly, and in many cases unsatisfactory, so there has been a return to the old style, with the long friends left and he sat talking with his wife and children, five in number, when suddenly one end of the room rose up three fect. The shock threw the whole family to the floor, with the lamps and other articles on the tables and shelves. They remained in total darkness, dazed and wonder-ing what had happened. Presently he supposed it was an earthquake, and called to his wife and children to come out into the street. He reached cloak and the cap trimmed with rib-bon. A distinction is made in wealthy

It is to be doubted if any person of any intellectual force and originality would ever be able to get through what is popularly known as "a course of reading," and it is at least certain that few germs of genuine mental life could be expected to survive the or-deal if passed through. The instant the mind is genuinely aroused and interested, the trammels of the book list are overleapt; and it is only mechanically plodding mediocrity that trudges faithfully and stupidly along a line of thought some one else has marked out. In the first place, it is worse than useless to read what one does not enjoy. The mind not only does not digest it and does not assimilate it, but becomes dull and deadened by the mechanical process of cramming which it is made to un-derso, until it ceases to be capable of digesting anything normally and easily. The hair of a farmer near Rainboro, Ohio, is reported to have turned from gray to blood red.

Rossini, the composer, used to set to work at ten o'clock in the morn-ing, having risen at nine. His toilet took half an hour, and his breakfast, house-gossip, etc., another half-hour; then he took his pen and wrote continually. From ten to twelve, while he wrote, numbers of people came, some with letters of introduction, or glad to make the acquaintance of talented young artists; he received them with immense kindness, giving them advice and sometimes letters. But what he absolutely hated was to be stared at as one of the sights of Paris. Once his old friend, Caraffa, came and told him, "There is a Rus-sian princess on the Boulevard who waited two hours yesterday to see you pass; she wants much to make your acquaintance. What shall I tell her?" "Tell her," said Rossini, "that I am excessively fond of aspar-agus. She need only go to Hotel et Chabot and buy the finest bunch she
