A MOUTHFUL OF BREAD.

Fifteen Thousand People Furnished With a Simple Meal.

Two young Americans who were doing Paris last winter saw, one day, a large crowd gathered in front of a mean-looking house in one of the poorer quarters. These people were strung out in a long line like those at the box-office of the Gymnase on the first night of a new play by Sardou, but they did not seem alert nor gay. They were wretchedly clothed, looked hungry and cold, and waited their turn at the gate in silence. Women in faded shawls and with shrunken little babies at their breasts; gaunt, hollow-eyed men, young and old, some in the blouse and cap of the French workmen, with here and there one whose appearance unmistakably suggested the professional beggar. The air was chilly and a drizzling rain moistened the pavement, but not an oath, nor a gruff word nor a murmur of impatience came from that motley assemblage, who stood there waiting with a mournful resignation pitiful to behold.

"What are all these people here for?" said one of the Americans to a passing guardian of the peace. "For the 'Mouthful of Bread,' monsieur," replied the guardian. "What Mouthful of Bread," asked the positive Yankee. "Ah! it is easy to see that Monsieur doesn't live in this part of Paris. 'The Mouthful of Bread' is a charity organized by a gentleman named Bourreiff. It has saved many a one from suicide. It must have been that the Bon Dieu himself inspired Monsieur Bourreiff with the idea. Inside there it is a curious sight. Would you, Messieurs like to go in? See! it is but a step!"

The two Americans accepted the guardian's invitation and walked past the wicket into a large hall with bare floors and high windows. Two long, rough tables occupied the center of the room and on benches on either side of the tables were the guests, exactly similar in appearance and manner to those who were waiting outside. The only ornament was a wooden crucifix at the upper end of the room.

Two women, plainly dressed, ministered to the wants of the fifty persons at the tables. One of them stood at a kitchen table covered with loaves of bread, from which she cut off enormous slices for distribution among the guests, whose tin cups she filled with water from a giant pitcher. Bread and water seems rather a poor substitute for a dinner, and it is difficult for Americans who have never crossed the ocean to imagine a state of society where strong and healthy men, able and willing to work, can die of hunger, with nothing but the spectacle of luxury to console them; but hundreds of such cases occur in Paris every year, and to Jean, the mason, who has fallen upon evil times, because business is dull, and Suzette, the seamstress, whose weary little fingers are numbed by sickness, "The Mouthful of Bread" comes as a guardian angel to save them from starvation or the Seine.

After these humble guests had eaten their fill they would walk up to the matron and address a word of thanks to her before leaving, to which she responded by a gentle inclination of the head. A workman now and then came up and made his bow with a sort of proud humility that would not have disgraced a drawing room.

Monsieur Bourreiff received one thousand francs from the Municipality of Paris to carry out his idea. This was not enough to begin on, so he raised an additional one thousand by subscriptions among his friends. During the first ten days that "The Mouthful of Bread" was in operation it distributed five thousand loaves of bread among fifteen thousand men, women and children.

Old Proverbs With New Faces.
Every back has its pack.
Home is the rainbow of life.
Men love women; women love a man.
Egotism is an alphabet with one letter.
The surest road to honor is to deserve it.
A white lie often told makes a black story.
The want of money is the root of much evil.
If you'd know a man's character, follow him home.
Only whisper scandal and its echo is heard by all.
They who live in a worry invite death to hurry.
It's a poor musician who can't blow his own trumpet.
He who would eat the egg must first break the shell.
It's not the clock with the loudest tick that goes the best.
Don't complain of the baker until you have tasted his bread.
Look after your wife; never mind yourself, she'll look after you.
The man who wishes to continue believing in his friends should never put them to the proof.

An American Audience.

The dominant characteristic of the American audience seems to be its partiality. They do not sit in judgment, resenting as positive offenders lack of power to convey meaning or divergence of interpretation of a particular character or scene. I understand that when they do not like a performance they simply go away, so that at the close of the evening the sense of a deserted house comes to the management a verdict more potent than any audible condemnation. This does not apply to questions of morals, which can be, and are, as quickly judged here as elsewhere. On this subject I give entirely the evidence of others, for it has been my good fortune to see our audiences seated till the final falling of the curtain. Again, there is a kindly feeling on the part of the audience toward the actor as an individual, especially if he be not a complete stranger, which is, I presume, a part of that recognition of individuality which is so striking a characteristic in American life and customs. Many an actor draws habitually a portion of his audience, not in consequence of artistic merit, not from capacity to arouse or excite emotion, but simply because there is something in his personality which they like. This spirit forcibly reminds me of the story told of the manager of one of the old "circuits," who gave as a reason for the continued engagement of an impossibly bad actor, that "he was kind to his mother." The thorough enjoyment of the audience is another point to be noticed. Not only are they quick to understand and appreciate, but there seems to be a genuine pleasure in the expression of approval. American audiences are not surpassed in quickness and completeness of comprehension by any that I have yet seen, and no actor need fear to make his strongest or his most subtle effort, for such is sure to receive instant and full acknowledgement at their hands. There is little more than this to be said of the American audience. But short though the record is, the impression upon the player himself is profound and abiding. To describe what one sees and hears over the footlights is infinitely easier than to convey an idea of the mental disposition and feeling of the spectators. The house is ample and comfortable, and the audience is well-disposed to be pleased. Ladies and gentlemen alike are mostly in morning dress, distinguished in appearance, and guided in every respect by a refined decorum. The sight is generally picturesque. Even in winter flowers abound, and the majority of ladies have bouquets, either carried in the hand or fastened on the shoulder or corsage. At maxime performances, especially, where the larger proportion of the audience is composed of ladies, the effect is not less pleasing to the olfactory senses than to the eye. Courteous, patient, enthusiastic, the American audience is worthy of any effort which the actor can make on its behalf, and he who has had experience of them would be an untrustworthy chronicler if he failed, or even hesitated, to bear witness to their intelligence, their taste, and their generosity.

He Got Even With Him.
A Danbury man was sure some one was tampering with his meal barrel. He drew a pencil line to show just how high in the barrel the meal was, and the next morning the meal was fully two inches below the mark. Then he had his idea, which was to set a steel trap in the meal. It worked well, and when he next visited the place the trap was gone, and there was a good deal of blood about, at which he chuckled greatly and told his neighbor, who praised his shrewdness and together they kept watch for some one with damaged fingers. Before they found him, this shrewd man went in haste one morning to the barrel to take out meal. There was a click, and he was caught in his own trap, which the thief had returned and set just as he did it at first. He had had one finger cut and hopes to save two more from amputation.

Too Bitter a Dose.
Two actors of the opposite sex who mortally hate each other are forced by the parts they play at a West End theater into the most demonstrative tenderness of deportment. Some nights since, when he was playing at love, she was to rush into his arms. Being a fine artist, she did her work with energy, and between speeches he muttered: "You need not swallow me." She replied: "You are too bitter a dose."

Another One Put on Record.
When I was at Washington I said to the engineer of a little building at the foot of the monument: "You have a mighty tall chimney for such a small factory." He silently chalked a mark on the board wall behind him.

"What's that for?" I inquired. "You are the 176th person who made that remark," was his answer.

The Kansas House of Representatives has four girls among its pages, and its docket clerk is a woman.

Brother Gardner of the Lime-Kiln Club says: "Neuralgia, rheumatism, weak backs, terrible headaches, and a dozen other ailments are kept from doctahs busy." He might have added that St. Jacobs Oil cures all these troubles and gives "delectahs" a rest.

"Are you made miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow skin?" Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. For sale by W. E. Dement.

That Dirty Dandruff.
Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in the world so thoroughly adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balm. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed, an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition.
