ASTORIA, OREGON:
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1885
A SPECIAL SESSION.

So the governor has at last yielded to the pressure and called a special session! Well, there was nothing else left for him to do after the silly action of the legislature last winter. Leaving the senatorial matter out altogether there are three or four important matters that need straightening up, and would grow worse by delay. Some of the state journals affect to believe that the thirty-eight Democratic members will not go to Salem. No such action of the kind is probable. The greater part of them will be only too glad to go; in the first place they will consider it a good opportunity to make political capital; then again the times are not so lively that they can afford to miss the opportunity to be thrifty; besides the whole business must appeal to them in the ridiculous aspect that it affords, for there is no denying that it furnishes many of the characteristics of an excellent joke, the idea that ninety men in sixty days couldn't elect a man to go to the national capital. And even if the whole 38 should conclude to stay at home, an impossible contingency, the 51 that would be there would elect. The only real question that comes up now that the special session is assured, is who will be elected? Will it be Hirsch, or Williams, or Mitchell, or Lair Hill, or Moody?

What effect the special session may have on the future fortunes of the Republican party is problematical. If there were no other business than the simple election of a senator, then it might with great propriety be argued that on the majority who could elect and didn't, should fall the odium of failure and the entailed expense of the coming session, but when all the mistakes and blunders are brought up and fairly divided the two political parties or their representatives at Salem it would be the pot calling the kettle black-face for the Democrats to try to lay all the blame on the Republicans. In the meantime the dear people can stand ready to pay $30,000 for the fun.

What a splendid piece of road, what a useful highway, that $30,000 would build! Twenty years ago a special session of the Oregon legislature was called. Let us hope that it will be twenty years more before another is made necessary by the folly of those who represent the commonwealth at the state capital.

A WASHINGTON special says: Possibly there may be a curious sequel to the case of Judge Dawne's appointment to Alaska, with respect to whom the president some months ago wrote the letter that attracted so much attention. President Arthur appointed to that position McAllister, who is said to be a Democrat whenever taking an active part in politics. It is learned that his removal was secured by the Presbyterian mission agency in Alaska, through agents here, and by representations that seemed hostile to the mission. Then came the appointment of Dawne, a concededly unfit person, whose appointment has not yet been revoked. Judge McAllister's father, a society man in New York, has interested himself very actively in his son's behalf. He has secured letters from August Belmont and other prominent Democrats, urging his son to be restored to his office. At least one member of the cabinet is very actively interested in McAllister's behalf.

The street car drivers and conductors of St. Louis have struck. They have been working sixteen and three-fourths hours per day, the drivers getting $1.50 and the conductors $1.75 for their day's work. They are willing to work twelve hours for $1.75 and $2.00 respectively.

The Louisville Courier-Journal says: "Some say sheol is a magnificent dry goods store crowded with women who have no money."

The Ohio election takes place to-day. Who are you betting on, Foraker or Hoadley?

The Standard thus obligingly maps out the special session programme: "Besides the election of a United States senator it is variously proposed after repairing the defects in the laws enacted at the last session to repeal the Houl railroad law and establish a railroad commission, and on the other hand to pass a more stringent law to regulate railroad freight charges to investigate the swamp land business; to pass a law to bring the various savings banks and other banking institutions under state supervision; and to amend the mortgage tax law. It is said that the Northern Pacific and Oregon Railway and Navigation companies have exerted the final influence in bringing the governor to call an extra session, in order to anticipate the Central Pacific in the election of a senator in their interest, and that these railroads have already got things fixed."

FLOOD ROCK, in New York harbor, was blown up by dynamite last Saturday. The work of getting ready to remove the obstruction to navigation has been going on for years. The explosion is considered a success. The national government appropriated $5,000,000 to blow up that rock, and will assuredly be as just as it is generous and loan liberally to this section of the Union in aid of improving the Columbia bar. Here no dynamite or shock is needed, only to aid the heaving tides that want to make a channel through which the white-winged carriers of commerce may come and go.

The Oregonian thinks it is probable that a special session of the legislature will be convened about the 10th or 12th of November, and adds: "The Republicans will then have an opportunity to show whether they can suppress selfishness and factionalism, and give the state a senator who will be useful to it and a credit to their party." After the experience of last winter there ought to be no difficulty in coming to a right understanding. The failure there should be a sufficient warning for the present and for the future too.

The prophetic soul of the Sunday Welcome editor prompts the prediction that "trouble will be had with the Democratic members; that in fact thirty-one of them will tender their resignations at the convening of the extra session, and thus necessitate a proclamation from the governor for new elections to fill the vacancies, for which the same gentlemen will stand as candidates and probably be re-elected by increased majorities as a rebuke to the state executive for his desperate course."

NOBILITY is valued at its true worth in Norway, if the following story is true. A lady pointed out the Prince of Wales to some peasants of a Norwegian farm. They did not evince the slightest emotion, however, at seeing the heir of the British Empire, but only asked quietly, "Where is Mr. Gladstone?"

The schooner Dautless, which was defeated in the two ocean races by the cutter Genesta is going to the Mediterranean this winter, and it is reported in New York will attempt to bring back the two challenge-cups, contesting for them with the Genesta over the English channel course.

The Olympian from Tacoma has been quarantined at Victoria, having on board passengers from Montreal where the small pox is now virulent.
