FINE FEATHERS.

Plumes That are Worth Their Weight

The jaunty hat has given a great impetus to every novelty in the shape of feathers for decorating it. First the pheasant plume was introduced as an ornament for hats; then followed the ptarmigan, peacock, trogon, impoyan and argus pheasants, ibis, heron, sea gull, black cock and owl, and now almost every variety of plumage may be seen in the hats of addes and children. According to scarcity and fashion, some kinds of feathers occasionally command a fabulous price. Thus certain sorts for hats have reached $40 to $60 the pound weight. Pelican feathers, from their soit, velvety appearance and their taking dyes readily, are in much request; so are those of the flamingo. and what are known in commerce as long and short osprey, which included the much prized short egret. These feathers range in price from $4 to $16 the ounce, according to the whiteness of color. A new and very pretty or-namental application of bird skins is that of the entire head and plumage of some showy bird for fans and firescreens; and the brilliant little heads of the humming bird family handsomely mounted on necklets, ear pendants, brooches, etc., form a novel species of bird jewelry. ostrich, arising from the slender stems and graceful barbules, has caused them to be prized in all ages. They are the dearest and most sought after of any leathers in consequence of their fineness and elasticity, being employed for court plumes and head-dresses, as well as the nodding plumes on the hearse Their value is enhanced because they can always be changed, dyed and remade into larger and richer plumes by patience and assiduity in the attachment. Ostrich feathers in commerce are classed in the following order as regard value: First those coming from Mogadore; second, those from Egypt and Bar-bary, and third, the South African feathers. These are long and therefore esteemed for many purposes, but have not the delicacy and elegance of the barbules of the North African feathers. The Aleppo feather used to be considered the type of perfec-tion of ostrich feathers, but they now so scarce as seldom to be met with in commerce. For the bows or tail feathers of the ostrich there is an enormous demand and perhaps more of this kind are sold than any other. Northern and Southern Africa are the quarters from whence supplies are obtained. There are feather merchants in Mogadore and other Barbara States who are in communication with all the districts of the desert where the bird is found.

Vulture plumes, as they are called in trade, are employed in large quantities in this country and form the most important branch of the commerce in feathers. They are obtained from the American ostrich (Rhea-Americana), which inhabits chiefly the pampas and vast plains of Pata-gonia, the Argentine Confederation and the adjoining republies. It is smaller than the true African ostrich, is without a tail and the feathers are not of the same rich and costly kind. The Patagonions and Indians make plumes, parasols and many beautiful ornaments of them. The trade in cock's feathers is very important. In commerce they are classed into several kinds, the saddle and the hackle feathers being especially in demand. Large white, of a pure color, bring $2 to $6 the pound. They are used for parures, military plumes and feather brushes. At Bahia the Solidade Convent is the great locale where they are made. Feather-work trimming is often applied with pretty effect to the borders and fringes of grass hammocks. Examples of these, with the representation of the arms of Portu-gal and Brazil, were shown at the gal and Brazil, were su Philadelphia Exhibition.

Goose feathers for ornaments are obtained from all countries. They form in this country a considerable article of commerce; the best are used for head-dresses and the bad Cut Faster quality for plumes. In France a large quantity of goose skins are pre-pared for winter garments. They Than any other axe made.

is like the European orders, only granted by special permission of the sovereign. The feathers of the gold and silver pheasants are much used for making artificial flies for anglers and ornamental work generally. The birds of paradise, distinguished for their splendor and elegance, are used for ornamenting turbans in the East, as well as for hats and head-dresses by European and American ladies. The genus Paradisca is chiefly re-stricted to New Guinea and the small islands in its vicinity. The most elegant in its plumage is the great bird of paradise (P. apoda), the best part of the neck being of a pale gold color. The hen birds are the most esteemed, being brighter in tint; the body feathers, which are yellowish, are partially dyed to en-hance the color. The most splendid harde of tropical America is the troper virdis or splendens. Azide from the critisant metalic splender of its plumage and the gracefulness of its form, there is a peculiar interest con-nected with this magnificent bird. The long, slender, gilded feathers of the tail were allowed only to be worn by the families of Incas. The Incas, with all their gorgeous magnificence, have passed away, and the race of the red men which venerated them is fast following, but the bird whose plumes decked their diadems shines brilliant as ever.

Eagles' wings and tails fetch a high price in the Kurlie Islands, being bought by the Russians. The feathers are used by the Japanese for their arrows. The brown and chocolate-colored wing and tail feathers of the golden eagle are used in the bonnets of the Scotch clans and by Zulu chieftains in Southeast Africa. Herons' feathers are a symbol of rank in Turkey. The Sultan wears three in his turban, the Grand Visier two and the other public officers one. The herons, as a whole, are the most beautiful of all the waders and not so much from the color of their plumage as from the elegant crests and prolonged feathers which ornament nearly all the species. Old writings speak of feathers being woven into a peculiar kind of cloth by the Chinese Among them was the Celestial goose yelvet, the foundation of the fabric being of silk, into which the feather were skilfully interwoven in a co mon loom, those of a crimson bue CHOICE GROCERIES, being the most expensive.

Dreamed of Dreaming the Truth.

night at his parents' home on Rock street, Atlanta.

The death was a sudden one, and was investigated by Coroner Haynes. During the night the boy's mother dreamed that he was dead, and awoke to find her dream true. The boy had been complaining for some time past, and has not been out a great deal for quality and demand—ranges from $45 to $290 the pound weight, but their lirst cost is of course much lower. her son was dead. The dream was her son was dead. The dream was startling in its details, and from it the mother awoke with a heavy heart As soon as she awoke, however, she realized that it was a dream and turn-ing over went to sleep again. Again she dreamed that the boy was dead. She dreamed that the boy had gone to bed talking of the morrow and that she had subsequently retired and dreamed that her boy was dead and awoke to find the dream true. The dream again awoke the woman. was bathed in perspiration. So real and life-like was the dream that the woman in her sleep had gone through the agony consequent upon the actual death of her son. The dream bothered her so much that she raised herself upon her elbow and called out:

"Francis, Francis, my son, are you alive?" No answer came from the bed on which the boy was resting in another part of the room, and again the mother cried out, this time louder than before: "Francis, Francis, my son, why don't you answer me?' The calling awoke the woman's husband, who asked:

"Old lady, what's the matter with you? Why don't you go to sleep?" "Oh, I had such an awful, awful dream. I dreamed that Francis was dead, and awoke to find it true. I have called him, but he won't an-

"And I was dreaming the same thing as you woke," said the hus-band, as he began crawling out of bed. Out of bed, the husband made a light and walking across the room to the bed in which the boy slept, threw back the cover, and gave the boy a shake. There was no response. The touch even convinced the father that the boy was dead, and turning to his wife, he said:

"Wife, we have both dreamed the truth; Francis is dead."

And he was dead. When the parents retired he was asleep. When they awoke he was dead. When he died no one knows. His death was an easy one. The bedding was not disturbed in any way. The boy's features were even, and the indications were that his spirit took its flight while he was asleep. . The evidence showed the boy had been suffering with consumption.

The Fool Friend.

But what shall we do with the warm, personal friend who sets up nights to love us but hurts us in every corner by his indiscretion? We can-not whip him and throw him away. We cannot get him shut up in an insane asylum, because the asylum was not designed for idiots. It was made for people who once had brains. It is a conumdrum which more than one of us has given up. If the fool friend could have his jaws locked with a time-lock, and then fed by an atten-dant though the vest-pocket, we could then set the time-lock to open after election or just before her before after election or just before he ikfast on the day of judgment, or at such other date as we desired, and all would be well, but you cannot do that. The jaw of the fool friend wags on and on till the goose of the one he loves best on earth is cooked to a rich, deep brown. An enemy may say mean things of you, but they lose force because people know at ones by his bitterness that he is your enemy, but he who knows your inmost heart, who knows what salary you receive and how much it lacks of maintaining you, how mean you are in your family and how pleasant you are in other people's families, how you smile through the day and snore through the night, how earnest you are in your labors toward reform in everything except your own habits, and a thousand other little glimpses into your home life which none but a friend may know, when he has no brains to balance his warm affection for you, think what ruin he can furnish you at car-load rates.

An international exhibition of animals is proposed for the next year at Buda Pesth.
