TRIALS OF A COLLECTOR.

Perils that a Small Man Encounters in Making Debtors Pay Up.

"Collecting debts for other people is a business that has its drawbacks," said a man who for years had been making his living at it. "You see that I am a very small man. Well, I suffer for my smallness. You may notice a blue tinge under my eye. It was as black as a shoe last week. I called upon a Nassau street lawyer, who owed a dressmaker a tailor $10 for a suit of clothes, and intimidated, very respectfully that I had come for the money. You will scarcely credit it, but he kicked me down two flights of stairs, and flung me into the street. I fell on my face, and it was not his fist, but a paving stone that blackened my eye. Of course, I made all the resistance I could, but what chance would I have against a great six-footer, such as he was? Yes, I am often ill myself in the same way, and I find it never pays to call the police, or to look to the law for satisfaction. The best way is to grin and bear it. Large men would be much more successful as collectors than small ones. I suppose John L. Sullivan would recover the amount of the bill every time; but large men won't go into the business, as a rule; so we are nearly all small, and are savagely abused.

"The debts I am sent to collect are mostly very bad debts, indeed. I classify them in their degrees of badness. If I have to ask a burly ruffian for the amount of a bill that he has already refused to pay, why, I expect to be rewarded with at least half of it if I recover the money. Nobody but myself pays my doctor's bill if things go hard with me. In more promising cases, of course, I am satisfied with a smaller sum. Occasionally I have suck. A month ago I recovered $600 that seemed a hopeless debt. The man who paid it was drunk at the time, and had just been left a fortune by his aunt. I received $300 out of it, and took a rest for a few days, as I generally do when I get a windfall; but I am usually as poor as a crow.

"I never have the slightest expectation of collecting money the first time I ask. But constant dripping of water will wear away a stone, and after I have called about twenty times the debtor, if he is not a violent fellow, finds that his life is becoming a burden to him, and the number of lies he has told in making appointments with me, and then keeping out of the way, only, of course, to meet me the next day or the day after with a flimsy explanation and another bogus appointment, begins at last to weigh upon his conscience, however depraved it may be. Then perhaps he pays, either by installments, which is the worst possible way, both for him and for me, or in a lump sum.

"No, sir! If I had a son I would not bring him up to be a collector of debts."

Can We Afford to be Honest?

Parson Rangle became disgusted with the untruthfulness of mankind, and preached a vigorous sermon in denunciation of society falsehood. He declared that lies told out of politeness were just as wicked as those told with the deliberate intention of deceiving. In fact, these society lies got folks into the habit of lying, and they readily pick up the other kind. The sermon made a great impression. Many of the congregation resolved to reform. Coming out of the church, Deacon Jones said to Judge Badger, who sits in front of him: "Judge, I hope you didn't mind my putting my feet under your pew?" The judge was about to reply, "Oh, certainly not," but he thought of the sermon, and answered: "I did, though; your old hoofs took up all the room, and were a fearful nuisance."

"Well," said the deacon, "the hair on your snuff is so, it nearly forced us to leave the pew."

They glared at each other, and just then Mrs. Badger and Miss Jenkins came along. Miss Jenkins had asked "How do you like my new bonnet?" "Oh, I thought it just love," replied Mrs. B., and then she thought of the sermon, and continued, "No, I didn't like it. It is a horrid thing, I wouldn't be seen with it. And Miss Jenkins got mad and replied, "Well, if I were you, I'd not wear dirty stockings to church: and if I did, I'd keep 'em out of sight." While these honest conversations were going on, Mrs. Smith had said to the next door neighbor, Mr. Murray, "I hope the crying of our baby last night didn't disturb you?" And Murray replied, "No—that is—yes, I wanted to brain the brat." And then Mrs. Smith called him a wretch, and wept.

Then the clergyman came out and asked young Synmonds how he liked the sermon. Synmonds said, "It was a grand effort—no, parson, it was blamed nonsense."

"So?" said the parson, and he drew himself up indignantly. Just then Smith and Murray, after telling each other some truth, clinched, and Deacon Jones was trying to hold Miss Jenkins from scratching Mrs. Badger. It took tremendous efforts to stop the rows and prevent a scandal, and, as it was, everybody went away mad with everybody else. The parson went home and meditated in a gloomy frame of mind for three hours, and finally concluded that society lying was wicked; but he wouldn't preach against it again. It's altogether too handy a sin to be given up.

Short and Crisp.

The Hat.

One of the church-wardens was observed to cast uneasy glances toward an individual wearing a sailor jacket and cap of a seafaring and jaunty appearance, which latter surmounted a clean-shaven face and closely-cut hair. After a little while he approached the sailor laddie and whispered audibly:

"Can't you take off your hat? Is there any reason why you can't take off your hat?"

By the discomfited look of the questioner as he returned to his seat, and the appearance of the rest of the costume as the wearer of the hat walked out of church at the conclusion of the service, it was evident that the whispered reply was, "I am a girl!"

A rich man, who had been to a poker party, dreamed that night he had a "straight flush," but had six cards. In the attempt to throw away the sixth card he struck his wife on the nose, who, being aroused and confused, asked:

"Did you call?"

"Call, thunder! I raised you," then, becoming wide awake and ashamed of himself, added, "but I am sorry I did it, my dear; it was an accident."

Little Polly has a neighbor who has a little donkey team, in which she often has a nice ride. One day as she was sitting with her mamma, the donkey was heard to bray, and Polly, looking up said: "Mamma, I like the donkey; but I don't like to hear him bray."
