BLACK-EYED BEAUTIES.
How Women of The West Indies Compare With our Belles.
The upper classes are either Spanish, or creoles, or "Sambos." The former are those who come from Spain—naturalized citizens we call them in North America; the second are natives of the island, of Spanish blood, more or less mixed; the third are remnants of the negro race. A Spaniard can marry a "Sambo," as all who have negro blood in their veins are seriously called, without losing caste. The male "Sambos" often find wives among the creoles, but, seldom among the Spaniards. Some of the best families in Cuba, as well as Porto Rico, have "Sambo" blood in them. The President of Venezuela is a "Sambo," as the President of Mexico is an Indian.

There are many pretty girls to be seen among the lower classes—more in Porto Rico than in Cuba—bright-eyed, jolly, sly-like beings; as graceful and supple as a panther, timid and modest, but with all the coquettish graces that budding womanhood is endowed with and always has been in all ages and in all latitudes. None of them can read, none of them ever saw the inside of a school house and do not know of the existence of books; they call you an "Americano," but have as little idea of where an American came from as of the composition of the stars; they reply "So Senor" to everything you say to them and modestly droop their long, black lashes over such eyes as is supposed were the ruin of Antony and were worn.

By that dark queen for whose merriment a world was basted.
These girls—the Maud Mullers of the tropics are beautiful—have an animal beauty that calls for admiration that is genuine and makes them victims of the lust of men and the poverty or avarice of their parents. A gentleman here tells me that he went into the cottage of a Sambo woman in the country one day with a party of ladies and gentlemen to seek shelter from the rain, and, seeing there a beautiful quadroon girl remarked upon her attractions in the mother's hearing.
"She is beautiful," replied the mother, "and Senor Don So and So only last month paid me $150 for her—more than any girl in this village ever got. I bought two mules and five goats with the money."

The belles of the upper classes, those whose languishing eyes and rich bloom have been the topics of so much literature in prose and verse, may be beautiful and natural, but with what they choose to consider artificial adornment they are not. Their eyes are wondrous black and bewitching and to be able to use them effectively is a matter of education. It is said that Cuban women—and by that I mean the whole West Indies—can throw more expression into the glance of an eye than any in existence, but the people who say it have probably flirted with them or seen the glowing of a heart in love. To me their eyes all look alike—beautifully black, sensuously languishing and generally indicative of a bad temper, but otherwise expressionless. They haven't half the expression of the eyes of a thoroughbred horse or dog and are simply evidences of passion, not of intelligence.

And with the eyes, ends the Cuban woman's beauty. She would spoil them if she could, but as she can't she daubs the plaster on her face all the thicker. The chemists here sell a sort of paste made of powdered egg shells, which the women paint their faces with until they have the appearance of plaster images. They take the stuff with them in the cars, to church and to the opera and when they think nobody is looking give their faces a dab. There cannot exist in the mind of any one of them a supposition that this plaster of Paris complexion deceives people, but why they think chalk is beautiful is a mystery. The neck and ears of a West India belle are about ten shades darker than her nose and cheeks. Their mouths are usually large, their lips thicker than is consistent with classic rules, but their teeth are usually white, even, pretty, and well preserved. Although they make sweetmeats, or "dulces," a great part of their diet for breakfast, as well as dinner, you seldom see a woman or a man without good teeth. But the most disagreeable thing about a Cuban woman is her voice. That low, sweet musical tone which is told about as one of the attractions of Turkish beauties is not heard here, nor is the bold accent of the English girl noticed anywhere in the West Indies. The voice of the most refined lady is usually as harsh and rasping as the cry of a parrot and she always talks very loud and in a high key.

They mature early and fade early these tropical women. They either dry up and wither, or else become fat and obese. There are no beautiful old ladies to be seen, as in all parts of the United States.

One of the professors at the University of Texas is one of the most absent-minded men in the State. Not long since a gentleman, who was only slightly acquainted with him, asked him:
"Professor, are you married?"
The Professor was absorbed in thought for a few moments and then replied:
"Yes, I think so, if I am not mistaken."

Goober in School
Parents are sometimes very unreasonable in regard to fancied grievances imposed upon their children by school-teachers. An instance in point lately occurred at Pottsville, Pennsylvania, where six scholars were expelled from a public school for eating peanuts during school hours, and their parents propose to test the matter in the courts.

It strikes us that the parents had better let the matter drop, providing, of course, the children had fair warning—as was probably the case—that if they persisted in munching the succulent "goober," to the annoyance of the nervous teacher and non-eating pupils, they would have to promptly leave the halls of learning. Peanuts are all right in their place—on a train, where the rattle of the cars drowns the noise made in cracking the shells; at town-meetings, where they act as a sort of moderator and prevent much useless talk; by the fireside, where the shucks make excellent kindling, and under some other conditions not necessary to state; but the line should certainly be drawn at schools and churches, although, perhaps, if a man is inclined to go to sleep under prosy preaching he might take a few with him, already shucked, just to keep himself awake, if he don't chew tobacco. Of course he would naturally be very careful not to work his jaws so industriously as to attract attention, but just enough to get away with a honest or so peanut from text to benediction. Most anybody can keep awake easily enough during the preliminary exercises.

On the whole, however, even this concession to the appetite for the nut that cheers but does not inebriate is not advisable, and schools should certainly be exempt from peanut eating. Gum is bad enough, but the artistic gum-chewer can manipulate her jaw so deftly and noiselessly as not to annoy others in whose proximity, and therefore a end of gum holds over peanuts by a large majority.
On the other hand, a teacher ought to convince pupils that peanut eating is demoralizing to a school without going to the extremity of expelling them; but if, after a reasonable amount of solicitation and warning, the practice is persisted in, then they should be fired out. The decision of the court will be looked for anxiously.

Woke Up The Wrong Parrot.
Funeral fact and funeral fancy are subjects prolific of good stories, but we have rarely met with a better one than the following, which is vouched for as a story of fact. At a Boston funeral not long ago, the clergyman was dilating upon the many virtues of the departed. As it happened there was much justification for it, as the deceased was a man of large heart and many merits; yet the clergyman, probably feeling free to let his fervor of language play unrestrained, almost outdid his theme. Not content with couching his praise in simple and straightforward words he mounted to angelic and seemed to attribute angelic as well as human characteristics. When at the climax of his eloquence, his hearers charmed with the sweet incense, the spell was broken by a shrill voice, which cried out:
"Facts, facts, give us facts!"

The sensible comment came from a sage and venerable parrot which had been removed to an ante-room, and then it was remembered that prominent among the virtues of the deceased master was a sturdy dislike for flattery and a habit of sharply rebuking "highfalutin."
Rough on Young Lawyers.
"Have you anything to say?" asked Judge Noonan of a prisoner upon whom he was about to pass sentence in the District Court of San Antonio.
"Yes, judge," was the reply of the prisoner, whose penalty had been assessed at imprisonment for life. "I think that the time wasted in making that long-winded speech by that young galoot you appointed to defend me, ought to be taken out of my sentence."
"Who is your lawyer?" asked one prisoner of another in Galveston jail.
"Col. Smithers," was the reply.
"Oh, he's pretty good for murderers, but he isn't much for perjurers or horse stealing. I've tried him on both. You should have hired Colonel Jones. He is good at any kind of rascality."

A Shaker community—Where the ague prevails.
What Parents Fear.
Many persons—especially parents—object to quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better to die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's Tonic does not involve this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor.

One Hundred and Six, and Ho Drank and Chewed.
His name was James Williams, and he resided just across the Sullivan County line, in Putnam County, Mo. He was a native of Tennessee, and was scarred with the marks of the combats of olden times. Up to the time of his death he enjoyed good health for one of his age, possessed a good appetite and slept well. It was a pleasant pastime with him in later years to boast of having flogged the bullies of Tennessee and Kentucky in his time. He had been entirely blind for the past ten or twelve years. He has ten daughters and one son, Uncle Joe Williams, whose head is silvered with age. For the benefit of sanitarians and prohibitionists, it might be stated that he owned to drinking much liquor, but was a constant chewer of the weed, but never smoked.
