The Smart Station Agent.

There is something about the agent at a country railway station that excites both my admiration and my pity.

When I go to the station for the purpose of taking a train and find him sitting with heels cocked up on the table by the telegraph instrument and his head bowed down upon his breast with the great weight of responsibility that rests upon him—when he starts, as if he had been shocked by some of the current events that are flashing along the wires and looks pained because he is not privileged to communicate them to an anxious world—when he rises and yawns and goes to the ticket-window to communicate to some waiting wayfarer the burdensome knowledge with which he is supposed to be full to overflowing, I admire him.

When a boarding school comes in to embark for home at vacation time, I pity him. About forty girls chattering like magpies and drowning the voice of the telegraph with their gable, is more than any station agent can bear when he is getting train orders, and I pity him from the profoundest depths of my heart.

I once knew a fair young man whose life was one great job of good promise. He had lied himself into prominence in the community, and the people had come to believe that one day, he would be one of the most highly respected advocates at the bar or occupants of the senate. When he was a mere babe, the old ladies said the Lord had evidently intended him for the ministry, but when he got to wandering away with other people's horses and playing poker, they reluctantly admitted their error and ceased to anticipate that his life would be devoted to piloting sinners to the skies. They then unanimously decided that he was destined to be foremost among the barristers and other law-evading things, but in the very prime of his promise he became a supe in a railway station and began learning telegraphy.

His fluent and graceful style of preparation soon won for him the esteem and confidence of his superior, and in due time, the latter could go out on a vacant lot near the depot and pitch horse-shoes with full assurance that the business of the office would be properly attended to and the confiding public kept waiting seven hours after supper-time when the train was ten hours late, under the impression that it would be on hand in twenty minutes. The young man applied himself assiduously to his work of self-education and soon became proficient. One day, when he had acquired the requisite knowledge and confidence to run the road, which was about four months after he first entered the office, he sent the following message to the train dispatcher, who called his station to give orders: "Agent playing mumble-peg four blocks away. Shall I receive? P. R. O."

Of course he was instructed to receive, as if there were any delay a train would soon rush by the station and go crashing into the rear end of another which had broken down between that station and the next. He did well, and that evening he received an order dismissing his superior and appointing him to fill the vacancy. He was young and inexperienced, however, and in due time he arose to the sublime height of utter contempt for the public. He strutted about like a sultan and laughed at the anxiety of the people to know when they might expect to get away from the village he seemed to own. When knowledge was wanted, he was more ignorant than Galatea before Pnygmalion got mashed on her, and when no flood of intellectual effluence was desired, knowledge seemed to fall from his lips like bricks from an overturned hoil. He seemed to be master of the situation, and all the complaints of indignant shippers and the pleadings of a long-suffering people could not shake him from his impregnable abode in the heart of the management.

One day, a gentleman who was managing editor of a cattle ranch in Colorado came to the station. He made certain inquiries concerning the running of trains which the agent was not prompt and obliging in answering, and the cow-general spoke of him in terms that were not remarkable for their freedom from inuendo. The young man replied in his customary concise style, and in about a fraction of a second, the atmosphere of the room was saturated with smoke, noise and an odor of burned powder.

The next day, his perforated remains were placed in a black walnut box and hauled away to the village burying ground, and there they lay, joining their kindred dust and enjoying the other privileges and compliments of the season, while there is a meek and lowly young man with four revolvers and a look of unutterable awe concealed about his person looking after the affairs of the railroad in that village. The cow-commander has been acquitted of any evil intent, and carries in his hip pocket a set of handsomely engrossed resolutions of condolence and profound respect.

While workmen were engaged on the new City Hall, Philadelphia, recently, a portion of the arm, the hand and the scales, of the figure of Justice broke off and fell to the floor with a crash. Justice probably got disgusted with being a misrepresentation of the condition of affairs in Philadelphia and threw down the scales. Things must be pretty bad when they shock a marble statue.

How to Reduce Weight.

Do not try it. The London Field is anxious to induce hunting men to adopt measures to reduce their weight for the saddle. This is our advice on the subject. Rest assured no measure will suffice which is not injurious to health. One man will put on weight with very little food, while another will undermine his stability by a reduction which appears to be moderate. The simple but golden rule is to eat slowly and masticate the food taken thoroughly, so that there may be time for the organism to make known its satisfaction with the supply placed at its disposal before the stomach is overloaded. The mistake made by hunting men and others who, to use a common expression, "are as hungry as hunters," is that of coming home exhausted and eating ravenously. By this haste no time is allowed for the organic needs of the eater to cry: "Hold—enough!" It is like emptying a whole scuttled of coal on the fire when it is only in need of a few dexterously placed lumps. The digestive organs being in fairly good working order, the repletion is not resented as it would be by a weakly "dyspeptic," and muscle and fat are laid on in excess. If we only ate more deliberately, we should find half our accustomed quantity of food sufficient to satisfy the most eager cravings of hunger. What we call "appetite" is a most misleading sensation. It is only remotely related to the actual demands of the organism. Let hunting men, and men of all classes who lead healthy, active lives, resolve to eat and drink slowly. With this single precaution they will soon find that their tendency to "weigh" diminishes, while the appetite being disciplined unconsciously by the formation of the habit, it will be needless, as it is useless, to live by rule as regards the nature or the quality of the food taken.

Power of Dynamite Shells.

Some very interesting experiments with dynamite projectiles were made near Washington recently, under the auspices of the Senate Military committee. Four shots were fired with six-inch shells with a range of 1,000 yards. The target was a perpendicular ledge of solid trap rock on the south bank of the river. The first shell struck near the eastern margin of the ledge, and exploded by concussion, shattering the face of the rock for a radius of about 30 feet, and carrying away several tons of debris, which were hurled for hundreds of yards up and down stream. The second shell struck nearly in the center of the ledge, exploding as before. It opened a cavity in the face of the ledge about 25 feet in diameter; excavated a pit six feet deep. Some of the fragments of rocks from this explosion were hurled half a mile, one piece weighing nearly twelve pounds being thrown clear across the canal and lodging near a farm house adjoining the Georgetown reservoir.

The other shots were similar in their effects. The trial is regarded as successful in every particular, and the safety of the system of firing seems to be assured, since the shell leaves the gun as safely as an ordinary powder charged shell would do. It is not impossible that this destructive agent of dynamite is destined to revolutionize naval warfare, and it is noteworthy that the representatives of the foreign governments have manifested the greatest interest in the experiments.

One of the most remarkable people with whom missionaries have to do are the Falashas of Ethiopia. They are black Hebrews, about 200,000 in number, living west of Jordan, who have as their holy writings the Old Testament in an Ethiopic version, and who still rigidly adhere to the Mosaic ceremonies and laws. They are the children of Hebrew immigrants, who at the time of the great Dispersion, settled in Abyssinia and married wives of that nation. Efforts made during the last 200 years to convert them to Christianity have proved unavailing.

Medical Men of Distinction

Have been among the foremost to give honor where honor was due in the case of Honorable Stephen Butler. Abjuring old-fashioned professional prejudice, they have frankly borne evidence to its worth as a means of remedying dyspepsia, fever and acute, bilious remittent, rheumatism, constipation, liver complaint, debility and renal disorders. With all intelligent people this favorable professional verdict has had its due weight, especially as it was in direct confirmation of that of the people and the press. Far more factual has proved that bombastic assertion, too often resorted to by the proprietors of remedies of doubtful value. "The plain unvarnished truth" about the Butters is more than sufficient to convince a skeptic. As a family medicine of comprehensive utility, prompt and thorough in action and pure in composition, it stands deservedly first.

The inhabitants of India are not any wickered than the rest of mankind, and yet they are raising cane-cane all the time.

One of the very best possessions is self-possession. Another equally as valuable is Red Star Cough Cure. A bottle of that medicine will remove the very worst cough or cold ever contracted.

For lame Back, Side or Chest use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Price 25 cents. For sale by W. E. Dement.

That Haacking Cough can be so quickly cured by Shiloh's Cure. We guarantee it. Sold by W. E. Dement.

"Haackmetack" a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by W. E. Dement.

The other shots were similar in their effects. The trial is regarded as successful in every particular, and the safety of the system of firing seems to be assured, since the shell leaves the gun as safely as an ordinary powder charged shell would do. It is not impossible that this destructive agent of dynamite is destined to revolutionize naval warfare, and it is noteworthy that the representatives of the foreign governments have manifested the greatest interest in the experiments.

One of the most remarkable people with whom missionaries have to do are the Falashas of Ethiopia. They are black Hebrews, about 200,000 in number, living west of Jordan, who have as their holy writings the Old Testament in an Ethiopic version, and who still rigidly adhere to the Mosaic ceremonies and laws. They are the children of Hebrew immigrants, who at the time of the great Dispersion, settled in Abyssinia and married wives of that nation. Efforts made during the last 200 years to convert them to Christianity have proved unavailing.

Medical Men of Distinction

Have been among the foremost to give honor where honor was due in the case of Honorable Stephen Butler. Abjuring old-fashioned professional prejudice, they have frankly borne evidence to its worth as a means of remedying dyspepsia, fever and acute, bilious remittent, rheumatism, constipation, liver complaint, debility and renal disorders. With all intelligent people this favorable professional verdict has had its due weight, especially as it was in direct confirmation of that of the people and the press. Far more factual has proved that bombastic assertion, too often resorted to by the proprietors of remedies of doubtful value. "The plain unvarnished truth" about the Butters is more than sufficient to convince a skeptic. As a family medicine of comprehensive utility, prompt and thorough in action and pure in composition, it stands deservedly first.

The inhabitants of India are not any wickered than the rest of mankind, and yet they are raising cane-cane all the time.

One of the very best possessions is self-possession. Another equally as valuable is Red Star Cough Cure. A bottle of that medicine will remove the very worst cough or cold ever contracted.

For lame Back, Side or Chest use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Price 25 cents. For sale by W. E. Dement.
