To-night is "all Hallow 'e'en" and a good many old memories of old fashioned games and sports cluster around it. In many localities it is customary on this evening to have family gatherings at which a good many funny pranks are played, furnishing occasion for considerable innocent mirth. To-night is the great night of the year to tell fortunes, and it ever told fortunes come true it is those that are told on "all Hallow 'e'en."

THE HERO OF ANTIETAM.

Death of General Geo. B. McClellan.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 29.—Gen. George B. McClellan, ex-commander of the army of the United States, died suddenly this morning, at 10 minutes past 3 o'clock, from exhaustion, produced by repeated shocks of neuralgia of the heart, at his home on Orange mountain.

Gen. George B. McClellan was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 3, 1826, son of Dr. George McClellan; graduated at the University of Pennsylvania 1842; from West Point 1846, and commissioned brevet second lieutenant of engineers; served in the Mexican war at the siege of Vera Cruz and in the battles of Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, Molino del Rey, and Chapultepec, winning the brevet of first lieutenant and captain for gallantry. At the close of the war he returned to West Point, where he remained until 1851, when he was assigned to duty in the construction of Fort Delaware; subsequently, in his engineering capacity, accompanied the Red River and the Northern Pacific R. R.; promoted to captain of cavalry in 1855 in that year, he went to Europe as a member of a military commission to visit the coast of France and upon its return prepared an official report upon the Organization of European Armies and Operations in the Crimea, which was published by order of the government. He then returned to the army, and was chief-engineer and vice-president of the Illinois Central R. R. 1857-60, being chosen president of the St. Louis and Cincinnati R. R. in the latter year. On the outbreak of the civil war in 1861 his services were enlisted by the governor of Ohio in organizing the volunteers called for by the first proclamation, and he was placed in command of the department of Ohio volunteers April 23, 1861. On the 14th of May following the President appointed him a major-general in the U. S. army, and directed him to disperse the Confederate force occupying and threatening to overrun West Virginia. By a well-executed movement he met and defeated the enemy, and on the 14th of July reported his task accomplished and West Virginia clear. The thanks of congress were tendered him for these services, and after the battle of Bull Run he was called to Washington and (July 25) placed in command of a division consisting of the departments of Washington and department of northeastern Virginia; three weeks later he was assigned to command the department of the Potomac, and Aug. 29 the Army of the Potomac. Upon the retirement of Lieut.-Gen. Scott the command of the army of the U. S. fell upon him, which he retained until March 11, 1862, when he was relieved from command of all military departments except that of the Potomac. On the 6th of March he made an advance upon Manassas, only to find the enemy gone, and returning, embarked his army for Fortress Monroe; the siege of Fort Mifflin lasted until May 5, when following the disastrous campaign known as the Peninsular campaign, resulting in the retreat of the army to the James July 4-5, 1862, and final withdrawal the following day, he received the rank of Major-General in Northeastern Virginia, leaving McClellan for a short time without any distinct command. After the defeat of Pope (Aug. 29-30), McClellan was (Sept. 2) placed in command of the capital and the troops for its defense, which latter he reorganized, and followed Lee into Maryland, the battles of South Mountain and Antietam ensuing, Sept. 14-17; the delay which followed again created much dissatisfaction in Washington, and on the 7th of November, just as he had moved into Virginia with apparently a well-devised plan of operations, he was relieved of his command at the Warrenburg, Kentucky, and ordered to succeed him. Proceeding to New Jersey, he took no further part in the war. On Aug. 31, 1864, he received the nomination of the Democratic national convention for President in Kentucky and Delaware. On the day of election he resigned his commission as major-general, and in the spring of 1865 sailed for Europe, where he made an extended stay. Returning in 1868 he superintended the construction of the Stevens floating battery; also of the railway bridge across the Hudson, and in 1870 was appointed chief engineer of the department of docks of New York City, which latter office he resigned in 1872. He was the author of various military reports, textbooks, and manuals. He was inaugurated governor of New Jersey January 15, 1878.

WAITS IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—The proclamation of the president that he will not see persons seeking positions of public trust after November 1st, or their advocates, has caused a great sorrow to fall in Washington. A great wall has gone up in the city today, like that which followed the murder of the first born in Egypt. The Democratic patriots who struggled for twenty-four years to elect a president, and finally succeeded in getting one, don't like to be holding conventions all day, and have come to the conclusion that the president's order is not constitutional because it denies the right to petition.

"This is the first time in the history of the United States or confederate states of America, that the president has placed himself in seclusion like a Hindoo God," said a Democratic office seeker to-day, and when congress meets we will know the reason why.

There are yet a few days of grace before the president's order goes into effect, and there was a stampede to the White House this morning unlike anything known since the few days after the 4th of March. Office seekers fairly crowded each other out of the president's room. The result was that none got a fair chance to state their claims. It is probable that the remaining days of the week will be similar.

When there are but few settlers, land is of but little value. As population increases the demand for land becomes greater and there is a corresponding advance in the price of land. The owners of improved property pay most of the taxes, while the burden of taxation is scarcely felt by those whose investments are all in unimproved property. What is the result? Those who own unimproved property grow rich by the labors of other men. It is a notorious fact that nearly all of the rich men of a new country are those who have grown rich by the advance in the price of land. Did they earn their wealth? No. They owe it all to those who have improved the surrounding country and made a demand for land. Is any man entitled to wealth that he has not earned? The question needs no answer. Then any system which makes it convenient for men to grow wealthy without exertion and by the labors of others is wrong and ought to be abrogated.—Tacoma Ledger, 29.

Excited Thousands. All over the land are going into ecstacy over Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Dement & Co.'s Drug Store. Large size $1.00.

A Country Where Umbrellas are Safe. The Norwegians are a wonderfully honest people. As we were driving along one day, we saw two umbrellas hanging on the branch of a tree. Some people, not caring to be incumbered with them, had left them there till they should pass that way again. Although it was raining, no one thought of touching them. An English lady told us that going for a walk one day she found her fur-lined silk cloak too heavy, and remarked that she wished that she had left it at home. "Take it off," said a Norwegian friend who was with her, "and hang it on this tree." She did so, and when she returned two hours later there it still remained.—Springfield Republic.

Salmon Versus Oysters. Fresh salmon is a big luxury in New York because it costs six bits a pound, but in Astoria whar a salmon long as a hce-handle costs a rubbed quarter, the swell dudes put up a big round dollar for five eastern oysters that ain't worth five cents in Baltimore. That is regular luxury. Pay six prices for anything from 'tother side er the world and turn up your nose at just as good or better things right to home. That's one thing grips Oregon now and keeps her back.—"Uncle Jeff Snook" in Oregon Viadette.

CURRENT OPINION.

Independence and mutual support lie at the bottom of all commercial relations. The recognition of the necessity for their exercise prompts men to go beyond the ordinary protection and benefits of national association and form secret societies, where choice and certain observances render the members closer to one another, and the dependence that is needed more absolutely reliable. This matter of selection follows us from the family to the nation, from the home circle to the outside world; and though this republic has not yet felt the necessity of drawing marked class distinctions the time is fast approaching when it must do so.—Tacoma News, 28.

Arbitration where justice and not precedent would be the rule, is what should be resorted to. But ask the next legislation to enact that differences over sums of money under one thousand dollars could be settled by arbitration, without appeal, lawyers prohibited from acting as pleaders or arbitrators, and it would be laughed out of both houses.—Oregon Viadette, 29.

The people of Oregon want a senator who will not only represent them creditably on the floor of the senate, but also industriously in the departments. They will not object to breadth and dignity, but will insist upon complaisance and industry. The one they will not refuse to accept; the other they will insist upon having.—Portland News, 30.

NOT PARAFFINE BUT HALLOYSITE.

EDITOR ASTORIAN: Allow me to say a word about that "paraffine mine" of "H."

I have had a specimen of it brought to me and I find on chemical analysis that it is a compound hydrous silicate of aluminum and magnesium. As a mineral it is known as "halloysite." The red colored substance in which it is found belongs to the same general division of silicates and is known by the specific name of "sapoune."

Both minerals are found in various parts of the earth, and there are quite a number of varieties. They are not necessarily associated with coal nor do they indicate coal measures in their vicinity. As for their value, it is no more than an equal bulk of the so-called soap stone found back of town.

Japanese Scenes. Kawasaki, a large village, was the last stopping place of the gash lords in their progresses from the country to pay their annual visits to the ruler of the land in Yeddo. Hence Kawasaki is still a village of tea-houses, although its glory has departed. Some of the Kawasaki tea-houses are fine buildings, able to accommodate a couple of hundred sleepers, bright and attractive, with white, soft mats, curiously carved and carefully polished wood-work, quaint and gorgeous scrolls and pictures, and with suits of private apartments behind, looking on to pleasant gardens.

Here we have another curious and animated scene, for the pilgrims run in grooves, and stop exactly where long habit ordains them to stop, Kawasaki being the first place. The basement hall is crowded with pilgrims—eating, drinking, laughing, talking, chaffing, washing their feet, packing up their baggage, arriving and departing. Amid them sit, butterfly like, scores of damsels, dressed in light raiment of one pattern, worried out of their lives with orders from all directions, balancing huge pyramids of dishes in their hands—yet ever smiling and polite. Up and down the great wooden ladder communicating with the upper floor moves a constant stream of guests and servants. The balconies are crowded with gentlemen who have discarded their upper garments for ease and coolness, and who are exchanging lively volleys of repartee with the crowd of passers-by in the roadway beneath.

A Reliable Article. For enterprise, push and a desire to get such goods as will give the trade satisfaction, J. W. Conn the Druggist leads all competition. He sells Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, because it's the best medicine on the market, for Coughs, Colds, Croup and Primary Consumption. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Samples free.
