Domestic Tyranny.

How is this for a case of domestic that one evening, shortly after her marriage, she was engaged with her fancy-work, and her husband was reading Shakespeare to her—subject to occasional interruptions, first from the servant girl, who asked to go out, then from a sudden recollection that the codfish for breakfast had not been put soaking, then from the been put soaking, then from the necessity of winding a new skein of worsted—when her husband laid down his book, and seriously ad-dressed her in this wise: "My dear, I am going to make a rule, and I hope you will be good enough to take it kindly. I am going to decree that you shall do nothing whatever about the household or about anything else from six o'clock every evening till after breakfast the next day. I want after breakfast the next day. I want you to give the evenings to me and to our mutual recreation. When I look up from my reading I want to see your face answering me, and not scowling over a dropped stitch. I hope you will never touch another piece of work after tea." "Not fancy-work?" gasped the young wife.
"No, not fancy-work. When I propose a little music, or a game of chess hope you will never touch another piece of work after tea." "Not fancy-work?" gasped the young wife. "No, not fancy-work. When I pro-pose a little music, or a game of chess four, and mine too."

My friend told me that she felt the regulation a very hard one, and, what was worse, she was inclined to question its wisdom. She had been brought up to believe that a woman's hands should never be idle, however it might be with her brain and her tongue, and she remembered that the candle of Solomon's virtuous woman went not out by night. But she knew her husband well enough to know that he would not make a rule unless he meant to have it kept, and, being a conscientious wife, she set about keeping this in letter and in spirit. There were times, she said, after the babies came, when it was absolutely necessary to do some work in the evenings, but at such times she al-ways went to her husband, if he were at home, and asked his permission. It was granted, but always so reluctantly that she felt more unwilling than ever to disregard the edict, and the victim confesses that on the whole it has been a success. She has not so many crazy quilts and afghans as some women, but she has some things worth having. She has hosts of friends, among them a number of young men, who will stay away from the minstrels any time for an even-ing of music and games at her house; she has five sons and two daughters, who think mamma is the best company in the world; she has a husband who is as proud of her as when she was a bride. And I de-clare, Mr. Spectator, if you were to see this man at home some evening, laughing and talking with his wife and children, or reading to them, you never would suspect him of being a tyrant.—[Hannah Homebody, in Christian Union.

Cure For Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some effection of the kidneys or neighboring organs.
