The clerk replied to the effect that he would send the agent of a livery stable to take her order in person, whereupon the figure in white dis-appeared in the elevator and was oon visible on the parlor floor.

"She won't get any chance to shoot e," said the clerk, as he moved from the counter towards the office of a livery firm. "She's Mrs. N. Salm, the cattle queen of Texas. They say that she went to a Houston hotel and ordered some fast horses, and, when two mustang ponies were sent around, she went to the clerk with a pistol in her hand. She took it as an insult on her dark. She took it as an insult on her driving, and wanted somebody's gore. I remem-bered that little story; so I shifted all responsibility.
