A COW-BOY'S LIFE.

Primitive Doings along the Camp Fire—Not What It's Painted.

The life of the average cow-boy is not so romantic as sometimes painted. They work hard, have little variety of food, and lead a lonesome life. Of course they have all they wish to eat, such as it is, but they do not get a chance to step into Young's very often, you may rest assured. While at the home ranch they have some of the comforts of life. They have a chance to sleep under a roof, generally on a blanket on the floor, and they can sit down at a table while they eat their bread and bacon and drink their black coffee. And during the evenings they spend their time reading, writing to some fair maid they have met at a ball at Uvalde or Del Rio, or telling stories and singing songs. When they go off cow hunting they take a sack, put in it some flour, baking powder, a piece of fat bacon, some coffee and sugar and a little salt. This they throw over the horse's back. They take a skillet and hang it to the saddle and keep a coffee-pot to the horse's neck. Their six-shooter is in a belt around their waist. They ride off fifteen or twenty miles from nowhere.

The sun beginning to get low they dismount, stake out the pony, and proceed to get supper. Gathering a few sotol stocks, a fire is started. Some water is dipped up from the puddle where the horses have been drinking and the cattle wading about. The coffee-pot is filled and placed on the fire to boil. Bread must be made. The cow-boy has to have hot bread three times a day. They cut off a few slices of bacon, put it in the skillet, and fry it out. The meat is picked out, leaving the hot grease, to which they add a little water, put in flour, some baking powder and a little salt. This they stir up till it is doughy; then they play with it a little while with their hands. Finally it is put back in the skillet, the cover put on and fire placed above, below and around. In a few moments the bread is baked or fried. Now the festive cow-boy eats his supper—coffee, meat and bread. The same for breakfast and the same for dinner, varied somewhat if it happens to kill a deer or an antelope. Supper over, seeing that his pony is all right, he spreads his blanket on the ground, puts his saddle under his head for a pillow, places his shooting iron where it will be handy and goes to sleep. The howling coyotes gather around him, but he peacefully sleeps; the sportive vinegar and gay centipede may linger near, but the hirsute tarantula may with measured tread walk over his face, perchance some lonely rattlesnake may insinuate himself into the folds of his blanket, but he sleeps the sleep of the tired. The lightning may flash, thunders roll and the torrents descend, but it makes no difference—the cow-boy is still there and is going to sleep till it is time to make bread for breakfast. This life he leads for two or three weeks, or till his provisions run short, and he, getting hungry and lonesome and wishing to see the boys, returns to the ranch for a day or two.

Cow-boys are a brave and good-hearted set. Their enemy is whisky, and they know it. Generally they are quiet and peaceable, but leading the free life they do, being under no restraint, it is not to be wondered at that when they go to some border town full of bad whisky and important policemen, they have a collision with the authorities. They are, as a class, fast-changing characteristics, as the stock business is also changing. A few years ago the Western part of this State was given up to stockmen, with unlimited range and countless herds and no law but might. This is radically different, and now the man who engages in the cattle business must buy or lease his land. The profits of the business will also be less, for a part of the capital formerly invested wholly in cattle, which paid a large dividend, must now be invested in real estate. The whole business is fast settling down to a legitimate business basis, paying large profits to those who engage in it. In the southern parts of Pecos and Presidio Counties are destined to be some of the best ranches in Texas. Land is now cheap and cattle are cheap, and the men who engage in the business are now going to make money. There is no question about the stock business being a paying one if rightly and honestly managed. And it is surprising that when money is so cheap in the East more do not engage in the business. Parties can buy their land and easily make ten per cent on their investment by putting cattle on it.

Last year was unusually hard on the sheepmen, but Iron Mountain Ranch, in Presidio County, paid a net profit of about $20,000, the owner of which values it at $200,000. The action of the President in driving the cattlemen from the Indian Territory will tend to increase the value of Texas pastures.—(Boston Journal).

Burning Incense at Home.

The agreeable fashion of burning pastilles and fragrant herbs in rooms that are apt to grow "stuffy" in damp weather, is almost a substitute for a fire on the hearth, which purifies and cheers the whole house. Ever since the mania for Japanese decorations came in, there has been a demand for the delicious pastilles or "reads," which are the condensation of Eastern fragrance, and their use has brought about a greater love for aromatic odors of a refined and purifying nature. The subtle sweetness permeating articles that come from China or Japan will last for years and affect the atmosphere, not merely of the room they are in, but of the entire house. There is not a Rimmel or a Lubin in Europe that can produce this intoxicating, and, if one may say so, high-bred perfume from the Orient, try as he may. A bunch of Japanese pastilles, smoldering one at a time in a little incense burner, will last several weeks, while for olfactories disliking any perfume, however delicate, a bit of gum camphor or a little stack of pine needles produces a most refreshing odor while burning. Pine needles can be gathered by the bushel, and kept all winter to be thrown on coal fires in city houses, or burnt by themselves in one of those little chafing dishes for which Japanese art is famous.—(Boston Beacon).

Society in Texas.

A certain young society gentleman of this city missed a fine opportunity to attend a private party the other evening in this wise: A fashionably-dressed young lady, with whom he had a slight acquaintance, met him upon the street and sweetly and cordially invited him to become a party to a little private entertainment that was to take place at her residence on a certain night. Thanking the lady kindly for her invitation, while inwardly wondering why she had taken such a sudden and startling interest in him, he was about to raise his hand at parting, when she laid a lace mittened hand upon his coat-sleeve to detain him, and sweetly asked him: "Would he, if he had it in pocket, loan her the sum of $10?" He gasped, then stammered, and thrusting his hand in his pocket, drew forth $2.25, and informed her that that was the extent of his cash assets, but she might have that if he would assist her. She disdainfully turned away, saying, "No, that will do me no good," and walked off, and now our young society friend does not know whether to attend the private party or stay away, although the evening set for it is fast approaching.—(San Antonio Light).

Opinion of a Leading Editor.

Almost all the diseases that afflict us from infancy to old age have their origin in a disordered liver and here we must strive for their cure. Hence a really good liver medicine is the most important in the whole range of pharmacy. We believe Simmons' Liver Regulator to be the best among them all. It purges out the bowels, and if we could persuade every reader who is in ill health to buy it, we would willingly vouch for the benefit each would receive.—ED. CINCINNATI GAZETTE.

The Renewal of Vigor.

The most important step in this process is the restoration of the functions of digestion and assimilation to full and uninterrupted exercise, since it is upon their activity alone that the system can depend to replenish its dwindling store of energy. Among toxics which the voice of the people and high professional endorsement approve as reliable, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has long been recognized as the best. Its properties as a medicinal stimulant commend it to all persons suffering from the effects of fatigues, mental or bodily, as an immediate means of counteracting their effects; and in cases where loss of vigor is attributable to such weakening chronic causes as dyspepsia, affections of the kidneys and bladder, and the intricacies peculiar to age, it produces permanently beneficial results. These twin obstacles to health and vigor, liver complaint and constipation, are also removed by it. It also prevents and cures malarial disease.

A Vienna astronomer offers to sell for 1200 francs the right to name a star which he has discovered. It would not do to call it Red Star, for that would conflict with the celebrated cough cure of that name which has been so successful in throat and lung troubles.
