The Boy That Was Buried.

In Ulea, Murcia, there was attacked upon the 11th of July a man over middle age, the father of a family, and also his little boy, aged 11, called Jose Gomez. The father died, and a few days after, at 6 in the afternoon, the boy died also, and was carried immediately to the churchyard, at the same time when the gravedigger was finishing his day's toil. He viewed the last arrival, but although the grave was almost filled up he threw in the dead body and went away. Upon the next morning, as he opened the cemetery gate, the first thing he saw was Jose Gomez, almost naked, just as he was buried, amusing him-"Hullo!" exclaimed the astonished gravedigger, "who took you out of that?" "Nobody," replied the boy, cheerfully, "I came out myself."
"Bueno [good]; come here I wish to speak to you." El chico (the little speak to you." El chico (the little one), believing that he was to be treated to another burial, began to run, and did not stop until he reached his mother's cottage, whom he frightened out of her wits, as she believed he had come from the other world. "Where is your father?" was the first question put by the "The be stayed there; "The best average of the world and the first question of the cottage of the world and the first question of the cottage of the world and the first question of the cottage of the world and the first question of the cottage of the world and the first question of the cottage of the cot This powder never varies.
