SHARK STORIES.

Han-Enters in Whose Stomache

"One peculiarity of the shark," said Capt. Gilderdale recently, "is that he never will swallow a negro. White men and most anything else he readily devours, but a colored man never. There's an old tradition among seamen about man-eating sharks. When one has been killed the sailors look in his belly for gold watches and other valuables. You see, the shark swallows anything Free from Opiates, Emetics and Poison, used to find all sorts of things in his maw. Once on board a steamer the crew had been killing beef, and threw overboard a hide and horns. Not long after they caught a shark, and sure enough they found that he had tried to swallow the refuse. He got the hide part way down, but couldn't get away with the horns. There was a scientific man on board, and he thought be had discovered a ew species of shark with horns. "I remember once when I was mate on a ship from Calcutta. We were becalmed, and I saw a shark snoozing around the ship, so I slung over a line and hook with three or four pounds of pork on it. The beast didn't appear to be hungry and wouldn't bite, so I gave it up and went below. While I was down in my room the Captain sent word from the poop deck that the shark was close by the book which I had left overboard. I picked up my rifle and went on deck. The fish was over twelve feet long, and was making for Is just what its name implies; a the hook, when I fired right into his mouth. He gave a flop over on his mouth. He gave a flop over on his side and never moved a muscle. We lowered a boat, threw a painter around him, and hauled him in. The boys cut him open, and instead of the gold watches, they found a lot of young sharks—the big one was a she deranged or torpic action, such as Dyspepsial daundice, Biliousness Costveness Melaria, Sick-headache, Rheumathum etc. It is therefore a ruismathat "To have Good Health the Liver must be kept in order." ne implies; s the hook, when I fired right into his the Liver must be kept in order."

The exact latitude and longitude where we killed the old one. The boys fried 'em and eat 'em, and found 'em pretty good, too. I saved out one, and put him in alcohol, and Blood, Assists Digestion, Prevents Fevers, gave him to the Gentlemen Anglers' is a Household-Need. An Invaluable Society."—[New Haven News.

How Clay Was Taken Aback.

The Lexington, Ky., correspondent of the Philadelphia Times tells this characteristic story of Henry Clay:

"Major Throckmorton came of a good family. His father was at one time proprietor of the Galt House in a hotel here in Lexington. The old had a sincere regard for Throckmorton. The latter used to tell a story about Clay that will bear repeating. When the Senator used to come home from Washington he would leave the river at Maysville, and make the journey to Lexington by stage. "On this particular occasion receive his distinguished friend, and pressed a desire to personally inspect the inventor, as easily as a local that lay in the adjoining county of Lewis, about fifteen miles distant from Maysville. The carriage was called, and Mr. Clay and Mr. Throckmorton were driven away. They had some difficulty in hunting up the land, and darkness overtook them. A high wind arose and the rain began to fall. They stopped in front of the first cabin, a rude habitation, and Throckmorton asked if they could be sheltered for the night.

"'Sartin, gentlemen,' answered the woman of the house, a typical Amazon. 'Light off, I'll send one uv ther boys to fodder yer hoss."

"The great Senator and his friend Clay removed his hat, and, bowing in that courtly manner for which he was distinguished, greeted the woman in deep, sonorous tones. She was busy over the fire, but turned, bowed, eyeing the Senator sharply, "'What might your name be, stranger?" "Clay, madam,' answered the Senator, with another stately bow Henry Clay.'

eyeing him; 'Clay? Be you any kin to Bill Clay, up the creek, who was sent to the penitentiary last year for hoss-stealin'?'

"For a moment Mr. Clay was speechlass, and then turning to Throckmorton, he drew himself up to his full height, and, smiting his chest with his clenched band, cried:— "My God, Throckmorton, this is

Out of Sorts

Many persons feel unwell, not absortely sick, but in a state of discomfort. The liver is out of order. Take Simmons Liver Regulator. This untailing specific for liver disease has restored more people to health and happiness than any other agency known on earth. No one can take the Regulator and remain long unwell. Rev. R. G. Wilder, Princeton, N. J., says: "I find nothing helps so much to keep me in working condition as Simmons Liver Regulator."

Electric Motors for Elevated Roads

A short, square car carefully wrapin white canvas was drawn rapidly down the Ninth Avenue Elevated road one afternoon recently to the Fourteenth Street time proprietor of the Galt House in Louisville, and previous to that kept On the sides of the canvas was a hotel here in Lexington. The old gentleman was a great admirer of Henry Clay, and the Great Commoner and was made in Greenville, N. J. The machinery in it consists mainly of a dynamo which is to receive the electric current coming from the generator in Eighteenth Street, near Ninth Avenue. This current revolves the armature on the cab dynamo, producing the power by which the Throckmorton was on the levee to ward at the will of the operator. wheels are moved backward or for The purpose is to attach these motors, if successful, to the trains in place had a carriage is waiting.
