B. H. HARMON, SIS Stuart St. San Prancisco, Cal. CLATSOP MILL CO., Astoria, Or. WWW PRIMACE- A Glimpee of Lord Byren

There is still living in the north of Scotland an old lady who can give the curious visitors who sometimes drop in on her an interesting glimpse of Lord Byron. When the century was young she accompanied two or three holiday makers to Glamis castle, then thrown open to visitors, and, at the entrance, fear fell upon them. By and by a handsome cavalier with a club foot, evidently a guest at the castle, sauntered up the walk, and took in the situation at a glance. He put his arm around the walk, and took in the situation at a glance. He put his arm around the prettiest girl's waist, and drove the others giggling up the steps and into the hall, where he even signed their names in the visitors' book for them. Gray are now the locks through which the poet's fingers wandered, but the only survivor of the little incident loves to recall how George, Lord Byron, looked on that sunny May morning.—[Chicago Herald.

The Self-Possession of the Bride.

A bride—even the plainest—is interesting for the nonce. It is astonishing, too, how self-possessed she is. The man looks sheepish, frightened, half ashamed, half sorry; but the very importance of the moment gives the bride firmness; her heart is in the service—she forgets all petty considerations, and she goes through it gracefully. This is an inherent gift in the sex, not only in weddings, but in all solemnities where any display is required. After the ceremony the is required. After the ceremony the is required. After the ceremony the husband regains his composure and begins to look as if this would be the happiest day in his life. He takes pride in his choice; you see at last that his was a free-will offering—that he was not the victim his doleful, nervous appearance had led you to suspect. His eye beams as it rests on the sweet companion by his side, and for that day, at least, he is sincere in his promise that, as far as in him lies, she shall never have cause to repent her trust.
