WHEN MAKING A CALL.

The Arrangement of Chairs a Very Important Matter.

Where do people wish to sit down when they make a call? Near their host? What arrangement suits a small company who might prove congenial friends if they had any opportunity really to discover each other? Near together, not at points, equally distant from a common center. Shall an affectionate family sit Indian fashion, round the edge of their home, each in his own fixed place? The result is certain to be Indian silence and monotony. Chairs being to sit in, it follows that the use for which the room is intended is the first question to be asked. The parlor, which, in most families, is the quiet corner where a guest may spend an uninterrupted half hour during a social call, needs some easy chairs, lest the wearied visitor never comes again; but it needs, still more, light chairs—and more than one—that can easily be moved about. Whether the easy chairs are cane-seat rockers or plush divans, their positions cannot readily be changed, while the light chair, that can be taken in the hand and carried from one corner to the other, will furnish the opportunity for sociability two or three times in a single call, perhaps. It must be a chair that can be carried; it is not enough that it roll on castors, for it is still clumsy and heavy, and the effort necessary to alter its position will often prevent the change altogether.

A clever woman, to whom the great world was a second nature, once said that she always observed how the chairs were left in a drawing-room where several people had been sitting, and put them in the same position next time. This is the secret of success with chairs. Dispose them so that the persons who fall into them shall sit down in the places most natural and satisfactory. Arrange a group of chairs near the door, where the casual caller will drop into one and the hostess into another, and, without realizing the fact that they are sitting near together, will yet be placed in the best possible position for a little conversation. If it is a large drawing-room, constantly used by a number of people, multiply these groups of seats, not in ridiculous aesthetic situations, with the sofas at right angles to the room, but conveniently and naturally. Sit down in the chairs, if necessary, and see in what position you would like to find your neighbor. If you remember that the chairs are to sit in, not to look at, not even to give color, you will place them as people will wish to find them, and, without knowing why, your drawing-room will often be full of people, and its reputation will go abroad.—(Blade).

A DELICATE GERM.—The dreaded comma bacillus, the germ of cholera, has proven to be a quite tender organism, which is quickly killed by drying, by a heat of 140° Fahrenheit, and by many alkalies and acids. The process of putrefaction also destroys it in a few hours. In the human body the bacillus lives, on the average, only six days after the attack; in moist earth it survives from fourteen to sixteen days; in distilled water, twenty days; in sea water, sixty-four to eighty-one days; and in the bilge-water of an iron ship, thirty-two days. After these intervals the danger of contagion ceases. In common with other disease germs, the bacillus appears to have a remarkable power of enduring cold.

George Marden moves that Spain be renamed and called Cholera-land. Are you ready for the question?—(Boston Post).

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites.
As a Remedy for Consumption.—Dr. H. J. PRATT, Montello, Wisconsin, says: "After a thorough test of over two years, I voluntarily recommend your Scott's Emulsion to those afflicted with consumption."

About the only reference to base ball in holy writ that we remember is where Rebecca goes to the right field with a pitcher. The right field for water.—(Chicago Ledger).

Scene in a Police Court.
"Did he strike you with impunity?" asked a police justice of a man who complained that he had been assaulted. "No, wid a fire shovel" was the reply. "Then" said the justice, "apply St. Jacobs Oil." The complainant did so and was satisfied. It healed his bruises as quick as it cures rheumatism.
