ASTORIA, OREGON:
THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1886
ARISTOCRACY VERSUS THE PEOPLE.

The London Times has already come out for a union of the whigs, or the aristocrats of the liberal party, and the Tories. This was something that was foreseen at a long distance from England before the Times spoke. The pretense of the coalition is that it is necessary to defeat Parnell. But, says the Bulletin, it would have been suggested if that politician was not in the field at all. The way the notion is put up is this: It has been the custom for England to govern Ireland. Any attempt to disturb that relation so as to allow Ireland to govern herself, is called a breaking up of the empire. This is a proposition, however, that will not stand analysis. Conceding self-government to the neighboring isles is not a breaking up of the empire. On the contrary it would most probably result in its consolidation. The system which binds the empire in Australia and Canada cannot be said to divide it across the channel. Some kind of a stalkinghorse was needed in the present emergency. Parnell, it is thought, can be utilized for that purpose. The real danger is the growth of the popular party which has some wild notions on the subject of property and other things. The real coalition is on the part of the upholders of caste and privilege, wherever found in the old parties, against the new party of the people. The Irish cause, it is thought, can be made to obscure the real issue. Perhaps it can for a time. But the day is not very far distant when real lines will be drawn.

ABSORBED.

PATAGONIA, a country in South America familiar to every student of geography and ethnology, has been obliterated from the map. A year or two ago both the Argentine Confederation and Chile began to make aggressive movements to the southward. The forces of the two republics came in contact, and there was at one time imminent danger of war. Some collision did actually occur, and only the greatest forbearance on the part of the two governments prevented the outbreak of hostilities between them. They at length came together and agreed to a peaceable division of the country which each had manifested a desire to monopolize. Chile seems to have the best of the bargain, as she has taken all of the western coast of Patagonia to the extreme southern point of the continent, including the straits of Magellan, the island group of Terra del Fuego, and all the islands on the Pacific coast. The Argentine Confederation has the balance of the country from the eastern slope of the Andes to the Atlantic. The islands on the western coast which fall to the possession of Chile are said to contain valuable mines of coal and metals. The sections which are occupied by the Argentine government consists of broad elevated pampas, on which vast herds of cattle, sheep and horses graze, and which are regarded as very valuable. Chile, by occupying advantageous points in the Straits of Magellan, can also command entirely the commerce between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, or drive it beyond and around Cape Horn. This material modification of territorial divisions in South America is one of the most sweeping revolutions that has recently occurred in the geography of the world, and, at the same time, the quietest.

It is announced that an English inventor has lately devised a method of coating tin with a material resembling glass, which removes all danger of poison in canned goods, and the adoption of his process is likely soon to become general.

A Texas doctor gives the Medical Bulletin an account of the case with which doctors are made in that state. He took a six-hour ride with a Texan villager, who asked him a great many questions about the remedies used for certain diseases then prevailing in that locality. On the following week he had occasion to visit a neighboring village, where he found his recent companion with his shingle out as a full fledged doctor. He had graduated in that six-hour ride.
