A First-Class Education

"We have a good joke on one of the boys," said a Chicago drumer. "I won't tell you what his name is, but he travels for one of the biggest millinery houses in Chicago. Not millinery houses in Chicago. Not long ago he was at Milwaukee, and got into a row at the station with a hack driver. The hackman was a big fellow, and, presuming on his size, enjoyed himself several minutes abusing the drumner, who was a little man. The little chap stood it about five minutes, and then his coat came off. I never saw a coat come off a man so quick in my life, and as it came off he gave it a vicious sling to the other side of the room. He meant business, and in about 40 seconds that hack driver had a black eye, a bloody nose, and was yelling ustily, 'Take him off.'

"Of course, as soon as order had been restored, we all gathered about our drummer and congratulated him on his nerve.

"'You did him up in scientific shape,' said one of us.
"'You bet your life I did,' replied the millinery salesman, still a little excited; 'I didn't get a first-class college education for nothing.—(Chicago Herald.

A Decided Misnomer.

Mr. Featherly (to young lady whom he has not seen for several years)—And is it possible that this is Birdie Simpson, whom I used to know when a little girl?

Birdie Simpson (who has recently increased in flesh to 190 pounds)— Yes, Mr. Featherly, I am the same person. I do not wonder that you find me changed. I was quite a child when you saw me last.

Mr. Featherly (gallantly) — Yes, and now that you have grown so ston—er—increased so much in weight—er—ah—become a young lady, you know, I suppose I ought no longer to call you "Birdie."

A government clerk applied to the head of his department for leave of absence in order to attend the christening of his youngest boy. "How old is the child?" "Four days old." "Very good," said the chief; "but two weeks ago I gave you leave of absence to bury your wife. What have you to say?" For a moment the subordinate was dumb; then putting a bold face on he said; "I beg your pardon; my little boy is a posthumous child."

High hopes are entertained con-cerning the deposits of tin ore re-cently discovered in Rockbridge County, Va. The veins appear to extend through an entire mountain 700 feet high, covering 800 acres. The location is peculiarly favorable in having ample water-power for the purposes of reduction.

Cure For Piles.
