FROG VITALITY.

Life Preserved under Most Astonishing Conditions.

Experiments made in the past have generally demonstrated, what is really the common-sense view, that the frog cannot live for any protracted period without air. Yet there cannot be the least doubt of frogs having been found alive under the most astonishing circumstances. In the center of rocks, generally sandstone, and in the hearts of trees, they have frequently been discovered. Ambrose Pare, chief surgeon to Henry III. of France, relates a fact of which he was eye-witness. At his seat near the village of Meudon, he was overlooking a quarryman whom he had employed to break some hard and large stones. In the middle of one they discovered a "huge toad," full of life, although there was no visible aperture by which it could get through. On May 21, 1793, a mason named George Wilson, who engaged in building a stone wall, came across a toad which, out of sheer wantonness, he immersed in the wall. Sixteen years afterward, in 1809, it was found still alive. At Windsor, in 1790, a live frog was dug up from a depth of nine feet below the surface. At Castleton, in 1799, many frogs were found from five to six feet below the surface, apparently dead, but when exposed to the air they soon showed signs of animation, and became active and healthy. In 1788 some laborers in digging a well some twenty-five to thirty feet in depth threw out what appeared to be stones covered with earth. These, however, appeared to be frogs, and were so numerous that many of them were cut through with spades. Being exposed to the air they soon revived, but could not survive the direct rays of the sun. A writer who witnessed this discovery considers they must have been covered up "many hundreds of years."

Early in 1862 a man in Tyr Nicholas Colliery, Corn Tyler, near Newport, found in the nine-inch bed of coal a live frog. The hole it was found in was not more than three and a half inches in diameter. There was a slight hollow over the coal where it was found, and the frog when released commenced moving about, but seemed larger and more lively next day. This was two hundred yards below the surface. In 1731 a toad was found in the heart of an old oak at Nantz, without any visible entrance to its habitation. Near Caen, in an elm at about four feet above the earth and exactly in the center of the tree, a live toad of middle size, but lean, was discovered. When an opening was made it "scuttled away hastily." This tree is also said to have been firm and sound. Some twenty years ago, in course of the excavations that were made in connection with the Hartlepool Water-works, the workmen found a toad imbedded in a block of magnesian limestone at the depth of twenty-five feet from the surface. The toad's eye shone with unusual brilliancy, and it was full of vivacity on its liberation. The creature continued for some time in the possession of Mr. Spence Horner, the President of the Natural History Society, and for a long period was in as lively a state as when found. Similar instances might be quoted as having occurred at Selksworth, near Sunderland, at Kilmarnock, at some quarries near Cheltenham, and in other places. Only three years ago there was published a well-authenticated instance of a frog having been discovered in the root of an oak tree—at least two hundred years old—near Balham, Surrey.—[Chambers' Journal.

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites.
Its Great Value in Children's Diseases.—Dr. T. B. CRANDALL, Sterling, Ill., says: "I have used Scott's Emulsion with very satisfactory results especially with children. It is doubtless the best combination of Cod Liver Oil."

The National Complaint.
Dyspepsia is the national complaint. Almost every other man or woman you meet has it, and the result is that the number of pseudo-remedies for it is as numerous as Pinna's host. They are for the most part worthless. There is, however, a searching eradicator of this distressing and odorous malady, one whose genuine merits long since raised it to a foremost place among the staple medicines of America. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters extirpates dyspepsia with greater certainty and promptitude than any known remedy, and is a most genial invigorant, appetizer and aid to secretion. These are not empty assertions, as thousands of our countrymen and women who have experienced its effects are aware, but are backed up by irrefragable proofs repeatedly laid before the public. The Bitters also promote a regular habit of food and give a healthful stimulus to the urinary organs.

Is there any glue or anything that will keep the wild waves from breaking, or the magnificent mountain scenery from bursting on one's view?
Little Jack Horner sat in a corner,
With toothache so bad he did cry,
St. Jacobs Oil was put
On the tooth at its root,
And he said, now a well boy am I.
