THE MASSAUGA SNAKE. Why He Wore Cowhide Boots and Long Gloves.

Snake stories are always interesting, but the reality of a bout with a snake is far from interesting to the participant.

A gentleman went from Cleveland many years ago into the wilds of Southern Michigan. Seeing that he was not getting ahead in the world in the city he determined to buy a little farm.

"Better put on cowhide boots and long gloves," said the farmer, grimly, as the ex-Clevelander prepared to enter the swamp for the first day's work.

"What are you doing?" asked a neighbor. "I'm clearing up the Doty's swamp," was the reply.

"There's Mrs. Smith's snuff box!" and stooped over to pick it up. A pioneer farmer seized the lad and hurled him twenty feet away.

At last the swamp was cleared. Talk about your brave knights that rode out armor plated to fight their enemies! The man who reclaimed that swamp was a greater hero than any of them.

and mounted a large stump. For more than an hour I stood watching the horrible sight. The swamp was bounded on one side by a creek, on another by the highway, on another by a cultivated field, and on the side where I stood by woods and more swamp.

The Limitations of Egotism. In the writings of Goethe, no less than in his life, we see the limitations which egotism imposes, and which not even his great genius could ever remove.

A Dog Resents an Insult. "Low" Bement's huge, good-natured, and intelligent Newfoundland, Bruno, was recently muzzled by his master, in compliance with the village ordinance.
