How Sealskins are Prepared.

It should be premised that the seal-skins when taken from the animal are simply salted and brought here in barrels.

The natural color of the fur which underlines the coarse hair or outside covering is a dirty cinnamon, and instead of having the rich velvety color, which its wearers take so much delight in, it is tangled and curly.

The first work done on the raw skins is to lay them, fur down, on semicircular beams and strip off the fat with knives of different shapes.

Next they are stretched on hoops and placed in the drying room. Next comes the business of pinning or "unharing," as it is called in the English factories, and this process is kept a secret.

The skins are then washed clean, hooped and dried again. Once more they are shaved, then "butter-tanned," and then put into a tramping-tub, when a man in Adamic costume kneads them until the whole mass of skins is impregnated with animal heat.

The tanning and tramping are repeated again and again, until good leather has been made. The cleaning machine and the beating machine come next, and then the skins are taken into the chemical room, and the door locked upon the operator.

Then comes the smearing, the rubbing, the beating, the smearing again, and so on until the dark bronze or jet black color required has been obtained.

As may be gathered from this brief outline, the whole process involves a vast amount of labor and skill. Each skin is handled more than two hundred times, and at least two months are required to bring the pelt to perfection.

Yesterday some skins were exhibited that were ready for the furrier's use, and in the soundness of the leather and the luster of the fur they certainly felt and looked to be quite equal to the best examples of what has so long been an exclusively London production.

Mrs. Hendricks. The vice-president's widow is left in comfortable circumstances.

She has herself largely taken charge of the private business affairs of her husband and has managed them with signal success.

"Much better," the vice-president used to say, "than I could have done myself." The residence where Mr. Hendricks died, in Indianapolis, is worth $10,000, and he had other property in the city, valued, all told, at about $60,000.

His life was also insured in a considerable sum. Altogether it is estimated that he will leave $100,000, the bulk of which represents the earnings of his professional career.

Cure For Piles. Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs.

At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Address The Dr. Bosanko Medicine Co., Piqua, O. Sold by J. W. Coon.
