JEFFERSON DAVIS.
Why He Changed His Mind and Saved Two Lives.
A Baltimore correspondent of the New York Sun tells the following little story of the war:—
While the two armies under Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee were comforting each other below Petersburg, President Jefferson Davis became so exhausted by overwork that he determined to rest for a few days. His steward was a worthy German named Egging, who before the war conducted a flourishing nursery business near Richmond. The President notified Egging of his purpose to take a rest, and directed that all visitors be excluded until further orders. Mr. Egging and his assistants carried out their instructions, and Mr. Davis serenely enjoyed his rest.
One night at about 10 o'clock there was a strong pull at the front door bell. Mr. Egging answered the call, and on opening the door found standing outside a venerable gentleman who gave him his name and said he wished to see the President on business of great importance. Mr. Egging informed him that the President had retired, and could not possibly be seen until next morning.
"But, my dear sir," said the caller, who gave his name as Mr. A., "it will be too late then. I wish to try to save the lives of two German deserters from the other side who are condemned to be shot at sunrise as spies."
The mention of the nativity of the doomed men touched a sympathetic cord in Mr. Egging's heart, and he invited Mr. A. to a seat in the hall. After hearing the main particulars of the arrest and sentence of the supposed spies, Mr. Egging became interested in their deliverance. He accordingly left Mr. A. in the hall, and went up-stairs to Mr. Davis's chamber. He opened the door noiselessly, and moved on tiptoe across the carpeted floor toward the bed, fearing that Mr. Davis would be awake. The gas was burning dimly. Mr. Davis happened to be awake, and asked his chamberlain what he wanted.
"Mr. President," said Egging, "I have been in your service a long time, and have never, as you know, solicited any special favor from you."
"I have one to ask now," resumed Egging, "and I hope you will not refuse it." He then requested that Mr. A., who was waiting in the hall down-stairs, be allowed to come up to the chamber to see him on urgent business, involving the lives of two innocent soldiers.
The President consented, and in a short time Mr. A., accompanied by Egging, presented himself before the President, who remained in bed. After a short preliminary conversation, Mr. A. made known the object of his visit, which was to secure a reprieve for the two men until the charge against them could be further investigated.
President Davis asked various questions, and when informed that the sentence of the drum-head court-martial had been approved by Gen. Lee, declared that he could not and would not interfere. Mr. A. became importunate, and Mr. Davis so far relented as to agree to think over the matter for an hour, at the end of which Mr. A. would receive his final decision. Mr. A. then withdrew, and at the appointed time returned to the chamber with Egging. The President courteously informed his guest that he had considered the matter fully, and could not change his decision.
"The men must die," if Gen. Lee has approved the sentence," said the President.
"Is that your irrevocable conclusion?" Mr. A. tremulously asked.
"It is; I cannot reverse it," Mr. Davis replied.
"Then," said Mr. A., "will you rise from your bed and unite with me in prayer to Almighty God for the souls of the poor unfortunates who are to be shot to death in the morning?"
President Davis agreed to do this, and in a minute the three persons in the room were kneeling, and Mr. A. was fervently praying for the salvation of the doomed Germans. When "Amen" was said, Mr. Davis was about to rise, but he was prevented by Mr. A., who said:—
"Now, Mr. President, I want you to pray."
Mr. Davis, however, insisted on rising, and after doing so, said: "Mr. Egging, bring me some paper and pen and ink." They were speedily produced, and in a few moments the desired reprieve was handed to Mr. A., who, after profusely thanking the President, hastened back to the Confederate camp, arriving just in time to avert the execution.

Wisdom of Ants.
Sir John Lubbock, in a recent lecture on ants, asserted that, to an ant, the coming out of the chrysalis skin is a change of a very difficult, and, he thinks, of a very painful nature. He added that it was very interesting to see the old ant assisting the young ones to escape from the chrysalis. During the process the young ant is often injured and permanently crippled. The intelligence of the ant is such that Sir John Lubbock thinks that the "difference between their mind and ours is not one of an absolute nature, but is altogether a question of degree."

Mr. Hauck's Discovery.
George Hauck, the brewer "On-the-Hill," spent a week last summer at a hotel in Hunter, Green Co., rusticating and "drinking in the sweet beauties of nature." One day, on his way to the hotel after a long ramble through brush and briar, he stopped at a neat-looking farm-house for the purpose of getting a fresh glass of milk. The kitchen door stood wide open. Mr. Hauck, after knocking, walked in. He saw no sign of life except a baby in a cradle, which was being rocked to and fro by some unseen power. A closer examination revealed the fact that a stout cord was fastened to one of the rockers and run through a hole in one side of the room. Mr. Hauck resolved to follow up the cord and see what the other end of it was fastened to. The search led him to a small barn connected with the house. In it stood three cows, the tails of which were tied to the cord. It being fly time the animals kept up a constant switching with their tails, thus accounting for the rocking of the cradle in the kitchen. It was a novel means of putting the baby to sleep, but it worked well. The rest of the family were at work in a field about a quarter of a mile from the house. —Kingston, N. Y., Freeman.

Mr. Hauck's Discovery.
"Is land high in Vermont?" asked a speculator of an old Green Mountain farmer. "You just bet it is," was the reply; "if the trees wasn't so stunted the clouds could not get by at all."

The Begining of Sickness.
Never trifle with what are called small ailments. If you feel inert, with a bitter or bad taste in the mouth, loss of appetite, bowels costive, take at once Simmons' Liver Regulator. For the miseries of dyspepsia, the Regulator is a certain and speedy cure.
