A "CORN-SHUCKING."
Away Down in Georgia in Old Plantation Days.
I suppose our Yankee friends would call it a "husking-bee," as they are wont to call other such gatherings "paring bees," "quilting bees," etc. But we call it a corn-shucking. You must imagine that it is early autumn. The foliage of the distant woodlands have taken on all the variegated colors of the rainbow. There are gum trees and maples whose tops are one sheet of flame, oaks and towering hickories crowned with a mass of orange and golden, cold as leaves. The persimmon trees are loaded with their luscious fruit, and the late summer grapes hang in rich purple clusters along the fence rows next to the swamp. The pines alone are unaffected by the change of season.

The broad fields of cotton are white as snow, and only the "slip shucks" remain on the stalks where lately hung pendant the lustrous ears of golden corn which are now piled in a semi-circle inside the barn-yard. Day after day the loaded wagons have deposited their precious freight on the growing pile, until now it forms a rampart high enough to allow 100 men to seat themselves along its line. Invitations have been sent to all the neighboring farms, and as the dusk deepens and the first timid stars raise the purple curtain and gaze timidly down on the beautiful earth, they begin to drop in, singly, in pairs, and in small parties. They are mostly big, brawny darkeys with phenomenal lung power, intermixed with a fair sprinkling of hardy farmers and "young masses" who have either received permission, or have run away to enjoy the festive frolic.

Now there is considerable discussion about a leader. Every big farm has an acknowledged leader, and each party stoutly maintains the excellency of its own favorite. Charlie Green is finally chosen, and seizing a long ear of corn he mounts the corn pile, pulls his hat and bows low to the "boss" and to his admirers, and follows. "Of deys' one ting a' pe'man aldson eber do, Frow out de ole co's to frow in de new. O' rally rou'n' de co'n pile, Hoo jolly hot! Hoo jolly hot! Hoo jolly hot!"

All hands join in the chorus, and the rustling of the shucks and steady pattering of the clean ears as they are tossed into the open space in front makes a spirited accompaniment to the weird music. Up and down, back and forth, the leader trends the corn pile, singing at the top of his voice and swaying his hands and arms, head and body in time to his music. All are careful not to hit him, and he seems to pay no heed to the shower of ears that is flying around his head.

"From Sat'y's night twell Sunday De gal is on my mind, But Monday mornin' bright an' soon, De white man got me a gwine. Oh! git er long down de road, Oh! git er long down de road, Come git er long down de road, my lub, Come git er long down de road."

The pile of rough corn diminishes rapidly, the shucks are being carried away by the boys who have some high old times practicing gymnastics and on the yielding pile, the glistening ears fall thick and fast on the accumulating pile of clear corn. There has been an interesting light in the east for some minutes, and now the full autumn moon rises above the tree tops, and glides up the purple sky in all her majestic and bewildering splendor.

Popper Joe axes de blessing!" A venerable negro whose woolly locks are scant and gray, approaches the board. Slowly and reverently he lifts his palsied and withered hands. All heads are instantly bowed in reverence. "O! Heablenly Marster! Bress 'im in baskit an' in store. Bress 'e fambly, an' 'e servants, an' 'e prop'ity and all dat am his'n. An' grant, oh! good Lord, to sanctify dis food to de good ob our pe'ishin' bodies an' feed our souls on de bread of life, fo' Jesus's sake. Amen!"

"Now, des' he'p yo'selves boys," cries Charlie, and straightway they proceed to devour the tempting viands. After supper, in response to a request from the master, they sing a few of their wild plantation songs, and then disperse in all directions.—[M. M. Folsom, in Valdosta (Ga.) Times.

A Hereditary Ailment.
A great big overgrown tough entered a Grand River avenue saloon yesterday in search of gore. He was "primed," and he asserted that he was ugly. He even acknowledged that he intended to hurt somebody before he got out, and it would be an injury requiring the united service of at least three eminent surgeons. The barkeeper was reading a novel, head down and elbows on the bar, and he did not look up as the big tough pounded on the cherry and called out:

"Set 'em up! I tell you to set 'em up for all hands!" An old farmer who had been warning his shins got up and sneaked out. He said he didn't propose to go back home to Maria a cripple for life. He was followed by a lanky youth with brick-colored hair, who observed that the doctor had forbidden him to fight for the next three weeks. "Are you going to set 'em up?" howled the tough as he pounded some more. "No," was the quiet reply. "Then the consequences be upon your own head!"

With this he peeled his coat, and the two remaining men bolted for the door. One excused himself on the grounds that he didn't want to hurt anybody, and the other said he had just licked two men up the street and was waiting for his second wind. As they went out the tough upset a table, and he was about to overturn the stove when the little barkeeper shut up his book with a sigh, came from behind the bar, and exhibited signs of life. He took the tough by the ear and said: "Two dollars!" "What for?" "Damages!"

Two silver dollars were handed over, and then he led the big fellow out doors and marched him up and down the walk three or four times to show him off. By and by he stood him on the gutter, gave him a tremendous kick, and observed: "You go home!" The big fellow waded through the mud to the opposite side and stood and looked back. One of the spectators approached him and said: "You didn't make much of a fight." "I didn't, eh? Well, now, I want you to understand that I showed more clear grit in this little fracas than ever before in my life!" "Then you aren't much of a fighter." "Say!" replied the man as he dropped his voice to a whisper, "you are dead-right! I go in all right but the minute I'm tackled my sand gives out. I believe it hereditary, and I'm going to a doctor to be examined." "You go home!" shouted the barkeeper. "Yes—I'm going—good-day!" And he went off without once turning to look behind him.—[Free Press
