A Model American Girl.

The American girl that is being immortalized in serial and novelette for future generations to admire or censure does not represent the model of the majority. Fifty years hence the girl of the present period will live in the pages of literature as a wifty witty, vivacious, dressy, self-pos-sessed, extravagant being, whom the undercurrent of conversation will then lower to the descriptive terms of pert, saucy, vain, rude, and waste-iul. Children will look with distrust upon their grandmothers and great unts as the girls who once snubbed younger brothers and sisters, and condemned their mothers as being behind the times, while they took the lead in household customs and society affairs. Our English cousing now look upon our good girls as 'fair barbarians,' bold, over-dressed, presumptuous creatures, yet marvel usly sweet and attractive. Such ndividual descriptions do justice to the average, for throughout our rural districts and country towns, hun-dreds of girls may be pointed out who are modest and intelligent, in-dustrious and economical. Many of them are self-supporting, and put more energy in a week's work than some of their critics use in a whole Let me give you a pen picture of one of my acquaintances. She is a well educated, sweet tempered girl of uineteen years; is very domestic, and lifts quite a burden from her mother's shoulders by her assistance in house work and entertaining company. She teaches eight months of the year in the public school of their little village, and, having learned dressmaking, employs the vacation in doing the family sewing. She is a bright example of sisterly devo-tion and filial affection. In all matters of society she shows a daughterly deference to her mother's opinions. She teaches in the Sabbath-school, and is an enthusiastic member of a society for literary culture. She cannot play, but considers it no disgrace; and her course of general reading and her natural conversational powers quite overshadow the lack of this accomplishment. This brief sketch is not overdrawn in any particular, and I might give scores of similar examples of scores of similar examples of self-sacrificing girls, who, by teaching, clerking, book-keeping, dress-mak-ing, telegraphy, and like employ-ments, are earning enough to take them through college, pay off mortgages on father's farm, or support a widowed mother; and yet, if these girls were suddenly to acquire wealth, their characters would still retain the sweet pearl of humanity and the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit.

There is a great deal of unjust raillery in regard to the idleness of the girls of the present day. Their grandmothers and great grandmoth ers are pictured as patterns of in-dustry, and of course they did excel our young ladies in the execution of hard, physical labor. But in comparing this with the vast amount of social demands and mental disciplin which our bright, ambitious girls are expected to meet, we find that their vim and spirit is equal to that of their ancestors, though manifested in a different direction; and when we contemplate the overwhelming burden of advice that is poured upon them through the chan-net of books and magazines, it seems that they ought to be models of physical strength and beauty perfectly familiar with rules of society etiquette, and well acquainted with all modern feminine accom-plishments. We are glad that they are willing to accept all the counsel they can profitably use, and that they are keeping step with the march of progress and improvement. God bless our brave, self-reliant, Christian girls.—[Correspondence Rural New Yorker.

" Have you ever had any experience, sir?" asked the dramatic agent who was about to book an applicant "Yes, sir; I used to play the lead-ing part in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin."
"The leading part, sir? What do you mean by that?" "Why, sir, I was the man who led in the dogs. His name was not taken .- Louis ville Conrier-Journal.
