The Buffalo Becoming Extinct.

Anticipating the early disappearance from this country of the ouffalo, Professor Baird of the Smithsonian institution, determined in September last to send ont a party of hunters, under charge of W. T. Hornaday, taxidermist of the National museum, with a view to securing a complete line of specimens, ranging from the full grown animal to calves of both sexes, for the use of the museum. Mr. Hornaday has just returned from his trip. In his hunt, he says, which covered more than 1,000 square miles in Montana, he saw only thirty buffaloes, and of these he secured twenty-five. The days of the buffalo, in his opinion, are numbered. There will be but few, if any, left next year, and before long the buffalo will have entirely disappeared from the North American continent.

The Indians say, "If a dog howls in the night a stranger will come to-morrow." The saying does not state why the stranger will come, but it is probably to murder the dog.
