The lectures have been discontinued and the text book taken The book used is Raub's methemployed at Foster & Robertson's, fell ods of teaching, and can be ordered by any teacher, through the Portland bookstores, for $1.50 per copy. When once had teachers will find such a book indispensable in connec tion with their school work. The teachers institute that is held nonthly in Polk county, met at Dallas on the 22nd inst., and was various parts of the county. Meeting was opened by Prof. Robinson, principal of Dallas Academy. The first subject on the programme, was "How to secure best study," discussion being opened by Prof. P. L. Campbell, of Monmouth. He argued that in the first place the teacher must be full of energy and inspiraand have a general knowledge on all matters pertaining to that subject. A teacher that has not such qualifications will find very little interest in his classes. Also that a rule laid down for one teacher and set of pupils, will not answer for another. After a few other remarks the subject was taken up by Mrs. Townsend of Dallas, and after a brief discussion had been given by her, Prof. Hutch-inson was called for. He claims that children should be taught to tell what they know in their own language, and not the language of the book; he does not require a pupil to memorize but three rules in the written arithmetic. namely: the rule for multiplication, division and decimals. He teaches the principles and says if they are thoroughly understood, the pupil can form rules for themselves. You cannot pour knowledge into a child's head; the subject taught must first be analyzed, for, as Raub expresses it, "a child's mind is more synthetic than analytic."

The first subject taken up in the afternoon session was "Calisthenics in the school room," and after being discussed by several teachers, they passed to the subject of "How to spend Friday afternoons," which is an important subject to many teachers, and especially to young ones and those of little experience. Prof. Rob inson gave a great many useful hints on that subject, such as orationson that subject, which as of actions of the word, but teaching young public recite what they themselves have written without referring to their pa per. MRS. SOPHIA DA GETT. Fresh Ca'ifornia Butter just received at A. Van Dusen & Co.'s. CONFESSION AFTER ACQUITTAL.

A Dramatic Scene in a Missouri Court.

The career of Charles Foulk, alias Charles Watson, the gentleman gam-bler who was shot and killed at Hot Springs by a negro policeman, a short time ago, was an eventful one. He was tall and handsome, cool as an icicle, dressed in exquisite taste, and his manner and conversation were every inch the elegant, refined gentleman. His friends never wearied of lauding his bravery, and his enemies did not gainsay them.

As an instance of his great nerve, a sporting resident of Kansas City tells a reporter of the Times the followlargely attended by teachers from the ing narrative: "Some years ago a various parts on the county. Meetsoldier was found with a bullet in ing was opened by Prof. Robinson, his heart on a bridge near Carlisle. He was of gambling propensities and an srowed enemy of Foulk. The lat-ter with snother gambler was charged with the crime and placed on trial The men were given separate trials and Foulk was tried first and acqit-ted on an undoubted alibi. By the way, Foulk was a firm believer in the Tony Weller doctrine, and in all the scrapes in which he was concerned he never failed to prove an alibi. The evidence in the trial of Foulk's supposed accomplice was damaging to the prisoner at the bar. One lady, who lived near the scene of the shooting, identified the prisoner and swore that she heard a pistol shot, ran to the door and saw him running hatless from the scene of the murder. She was certain that it was the accused man, because there was a lighted gas lamp near her door which enabled her to get a good view of his features. Other evidence equally strong was introduced by the state, and a conviction seemed as sured. "When the defense opened no one believed that the case made by the state could be shaken. Foulk was the first witness for the defense, and as it was well known that he was to testify the court-room was crowded to suffication. As he was sworn and took the stand there was a perfect quer. Every one had a idea that ther, was something coming, but no one cas prepared for weat happened. As Foulk took his seat on the witness-stand, he turned to the stern, grayhaired judge, and in a clear calm voice that could be heard in every part of the room, said:"

"Judge, before I testify in this case I want to ask you a question.
Can I ever be tried again for the killing of that soldier?"

"For a moment the silence was al most painful. People in the rear of the room placed their hands back of their heads in order to hear better. but no one but the yenerable judge seemed to have guessed what was coming. He evidently did, for he replied in solemn, severe tones, that were rendered all the more impressive by the deathly stillness:"

'So far as human law is concerned. Mr. Foulk, you are a free man. No earthly tribunal can try you again. For any part you may taken in this murder, you will have to answer only to the great Judge be-ore whom we must all be arraigned. Between you and your Maker this never forget them. Foulk was the affected. As coolly as if talking to a circle of friends, he replied:"

"I heard these words and I shall

. "'Thank you, Judge; you are a man of honor and know the law, and I beieve you. I wish to solemnly swear. then, that I killed that soldier. You have acquitted the wrong man."

"The effect of this cool, deliberate statement, made in a voice that never trembled and could be heard by ery one in the court room, may be magined. At once the silence was broken by exclamations of surprise and indignation, which, however were quickly suppressed by the judge. Then, as coolly as he had made the confession. Foulk told the story of the murder. He said that as he was crossing the bridge he met the sol dier going in an opposite lirection. They were old enemies and had recently had a quarrel over the green cloth. Foulk said that as soon as the soldier saw him lie drew his saber and started for him. 'Not wishing to kill him, Foulk continued, 'I drew a little old-fashioned pepper-box revolver and shot at him four times. but as he still kept coming at me I jumped off the bridge, drew my forty five and killed him. I did it in selfdefense. If I had not killed him he would have killed me."

"The evidence of the lady who swore that she saw the prisoner at the bar running hatless past her door was easily explained, and furnishes another evidence of Foulk's wonderful nerve. When he jumped off the bridge his bat fell off and floated down the stream. When the soldier fell Foulk ran up the street, but did not see the lady standing a the door. When he had gone a little way he remembered that his name was written in his hat, and that if it was found it would be used as evidence against him. Waiting for a moment, and seeing that no one had been attracted by the shots, he delib erately returned to the scene of the shooting, waded down the stream, found his hat, and went up town through an alley. That was nerve. The lady was honest in her testimony, but she was simply inistaken, as was afterward proved conclusively. Of course the defindant was discharded. As to Foull's ulibi-well, he could always get an alibi when he wanted one. His story of the killing was afterward proved to be exactly correct. Altogether the scene in the court room was a very dramatic one, and I doubt if it has ever been equaled."

"After this episode Foulk lived the life of a roving gambler, visiting almost every great city in the west."—Kansas City Times.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has largely benefited the con-sumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen, has been added to increase the size of the bot-tles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, and the German Syrup for Cough and Lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted, in every town and village in civilized countries.
