GEN. BOULANGER.

Who He is, and What He has done for France.

At the very moment the need of a French Bismarck is more apparent than at any time since 1870, the ever watchful citizens of the Republic have discovered him in Ernest Boulanger, the minister of war. Very quietly for six years has this born soldier been doing his work. Ministries have come and gone almost as rapidly as the seasons, but no matter whether Ferry, Freycinet, Gambetta or Goblet was premier, Boulanger has been kept at his post. He is scarcely fifty years of age, but has the bearing and appearance of a much older man. As a dashing young cavalry officer he distinguished himself in several battlefields in Algeria and Italy, and he was one of the lighthearted, hopeful captains who accompanied Napoleon III on the celebrated march "a Berlin." Like his imperial master, he was in complete ignorance of the condition of affairs; like his imperial master, he regarded the French army as utterly invincible and able to march to Berlin without encountering anything worthy the name of opposition. He was at Sedan when the death blow was struck to French imperialism, and he stood with folded arms and clenched teeth, a witness of the never-to-be-forgotten interview between the man who had been his emperor and the man he seems to have made up his mind to imitate. He vowed to do his part in reorganizing the French army and making it what it might have been had it possessed officers one-tenth as competent and brave as its rank and file. Four years elapsed before the ambitious soldier became colonel. Then he led the expeditionary force to Tunis, and finally he became what he had always wanted to be—the French minister of war. He had all his plans arranged before he accepted the portfolio, and mapped out his scheme with all the nicety of a typical Frenchman who was at once a dreamer and a soldier. He had plenty of material to work upon, but he knew from practical experience that it was useless to think of doing anything indifferently well—he must reform the army altogether. This he has done, or at any rate commenced to do. His one fixed aim is to recover the lost provinces, and hence he compels every soldier to carry with him a map of France with the boundaries as they existed prior to 1870—that is, of course, with Alsace and Lorraine both included in it. Some people affected to laugh at this "pandering to sentimentality," as it was called by adverse critics; but Boulanger knew the class of men with whom he had to deal, and he also thoroughly appreciated the disposition of the French soldier. By this and other similar means he has laid the foundations of a distinctly national war fever, which will break out and infect every soldier almost to madness the moment war is declared. But the war minister did not stop at this point. He proceeded to abolish paper battalions and to provide for every regiment being kept up to its nominal strength. Next he turned his attention to the drill, both of men and officers, and in a few months got rid of all that was left of imperial incompetency in the republican army. He has established throughout France schools for the practice of gymnastics and physical training, and he has distinctly raised the standard of the untried victims of the conscription. He had ample opportunities during the war which crushed his country to note the effect of stern discipline and machine-like drill on the part of the German troops, and he has distinctly Prussianized the French army. Nor is this all. He has reformed the commissariat department from one end to the other, and so remodeled the other supply bureaus that a repetition of some of the outrages in the last war will be impossible. Then whole divisions were rendered useless owing to the paper soles to the contract boots coming off, and soldiers had to fight well fed troops on something very much worse than the school boy's bread and scrape; now, although the army is twice as large, every man will be well clothed and fed, at any rate at the commencement of the campaign. He has improved the armament to such an extent that in point of cannon France is far ahead of Germany, and he has also introduced, and is still introducing, improved patterns of rifles. Boulanger is more than twenty years the junior of the man he has set himself to imitate, if not emulate; he has had scarcely as many months of office as the iron chancellor has had years. But he has done more than any man in his country to introduce those principles which have made his hated antagonist great and his emperor greater, and there is none to compete with him for the honor of being the Bismarck of France.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A. J. Allen, a purchasing agent of the Southern Pacific, is in southern Oregon buying team horses weighing 1,100 pounds, to be used in hauling materials and supplies from the railroad terminus northward along the line of construction. He secured thirty-three horses at Ashland and twenty-seven at Jacksonville Saturday, averaging $100 per head. Work on the California & Oregon is progressing favorably, but will be pushed with the advent of good weather.

SEATTLE, Feb. 22.—James Kelly driver of a logging team, was at Blanchard's logging camp, was killed instantly yesterday by falling under the wheels of a car. He was a native of Pennsylvania.

TORONTO, Feb. 23.—Returns as far as received show 87 conservatives, 82 liberals and 5 independents elected. Thirty-six districts to be heard from will probably give Macdonald's government a small majority in the new house.

WHAT SENATOR NELSON THINKS OF ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

SENATE CHAMBER, ALBANY, N. Y., April 4, 1885.
On the 27th of February, 1883, I was taken with a violent pain in the region of the kidneys. I suffered such agony that I could hardly stand up. As soon as possible I applied two ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS, one over each kidney, and laid down. In an hour, to my surprise and delight, the pain had vanished and I was well. I wore the plasters for a day or two as a precaution, and then removed them. I have been using ALCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in my family for the last ten years, and have always found them the quickest and best external remedy for colds, strains and rheumatic affections. From my experience I believe they are the best plasters in the world.
HENRY C. NELSON.

It is said that the immigration board, which the legislature refused to further provide for, will be carried on for at least seven months and probably one year.

No One Need Remain A Dyspeptic.

"I have been suffering for over two years with Dyspepsia. For the last year I could not take a drink of cold water nor eat any meat without vomiting it up. My life was a misery. I had had recommended Simmons Liver Regulator, of which I am now taking the second bottle, and the fact is that words cannot express the relief I feel. My appetite is very good, and I digest everything thoroughly. I sleep well now, and I used to be very restless. I am fleshing up fast; good strong food and Simmons Liver Regulator have done it all. I write this in hopes of benefiting some one who has suffered as I did, and would take oath to these statements if desired."
