

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1887.

The Olympian leaves the Sound today, on route to Alaska.

Advertisements, notices, etc., are received at this office till midnight.

Zamloch appears at Ross' opera house to-night. Reserved seats at the Crystal Palace.

The Dolphin came in yesterday as far as the cape and sent up on the Canby a supply of deep sea fish.

The Montezano is ready for business and can be chartered for steamboat towing, excursions, etc., at short notice.

The Oregonian bears that the seals follow the salmon into the Clackamas. How fond they are of the salmon, to be sure.

The annual meeting of the stock holders of the Astoria Iron works will be held at Capt. Huster's office, at 7:30 P. M., on the 20th inst.

The bridge across the Willamette at Portland already changes the old condition of things—the ferry company now advertise in the Portland papers.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will have a social at the residence of Mrs. Geo. C. Flavel next to-morrow evening. A general invitation is extended.

The Salem city council has refused to allow Tigers coke enough to keep a fire burning in their engine heater; the same city council has also refused to pay a team that pulls an engine to the fire. Tigers have independently decided to buy coke themselves.

Talk about accommodation! Up at Dayton, W. T., when a bill collector calls on a business man, the b. m. if busy at the time, hands the b. c. a cigar and a story paper, and when at leisure, drives the b. c. to the bank and gives him a check for the amount. So the Gazette says.

Zamloch gave another good performance last night, to a large audience, and at the close distributed a number of presents. To-night is the last opportunity to see him. He is worth seeing, and beside giving you a very pleasant evening's entertainment, you have a chance to draw a valuable prize.

The well known ship Wm. H. Starbuck is just completing the discharge at Portland, of her cargo in as fine condition as any that has ever come into the river. She will be immediately put on the berth for New York by Taylor, Young & Co., for salmon, wool and general cargo, rates for which will be very low, and is expected to sail from here the end of July.

Some time ago Arndt & Ferchen sold a small steambot, the Daisy, to a party named Johnson, to operate on the famous seining grounds opposite Pillar Rock, and now the Astoria Iron Works has sold another boat, the Annie, to Johnson's competitor in the seining business in that locality. The seining business must be a profitable one when the proprietors can buy and operate steamboats.

So far during April there has been little done in the way of salmon fishing. The cold rains have contributed among other causes to make the river exceedingly scant and it has hardly paid to put out the gear. With one exception every cannery is taking fish, but the average is hardly four to the boat since the first. More salmon was canned last April, despite the strike, up to date, than there has been this spring.

It was Shakespeare who said that "he who lays hands upon a woman save in kindness, is a wretch whom it were gross flattery to call a coward," and every generation since has said that William had a remarkably level head when he took his pen in hand to write them that lines. A case in Justice Cleveland's office brought the idea to mind. It was the complaint of Mrs. Johnston, wife of N. J. Johnston, of Manhatton, who bore on her poor bruised body the evidence of her husband's cruelty, and who brought into court abundant evidence to prove that he had beaten her in such manner and under such circumstances as justified the magistrate's reprimand as he fined him $50 and costs, that there was no whipping post provided for the adequate punishment of that most degraded of all creatures—the "man" who beats his wife.

Sociable at Mrs. Capt. Reed's.

There will be a children's sociable at the residence of Mrs. Capt. Reed on Friday afternoon, the 22nd inst., from half-past three o'clock until seven. During the evening the sociable will be continued for the pleasure of the young people. Cake and ice cream will be sold. The proceeds will be given for the benefit of the Episcopal Sunday school. Will the members of the guild and the teachers of the Sunday school kindly give their usual donations?

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Views of an Astorian Traveling in Europe.

Crossing from Ireland to Scotland one sees the most striking difference in nationalities. Ireland, with its fine climate, rich soil and natural advantages has so far been a failure, while Scotland with its wild, rugged country, cold climate and natural disadvantages has held its own with the world. But the history of Scotland has shown to the satisfaction of every one that the hardy Scots will not bear oppression. Otherwise Scotland would be in a worse condition to-day than is Ireland. For it is not charity that keeps England from treating her as she does Ireland. No matter where you find the Scotchman—and he is found pretty much everywhere—you have the sharp, shrewd, suspicious individual, who is a true type of the men who have made Scotland respected in every land.

My work kept me in Edinburgh for some time so I had a good opportunity of seeing this interesting city as well as the customs and habits of its people. To one who has read Scottish history there is no city in Europe of more interest than this. All the way from the old castle down High street—every city in Scotland has a High street—through the Caenongate to Holyrood palace is most interesting, with its buildings and historical landmarks. I could write a long letter on Edinburgh itself, but this has been done so often and much better than I could do that I will not attempt it. The Scotchmen are the whisky drinkers of the world, if one may judge from Edinburgh which has more saloons and drunken men in it than any place I have seen before. True they say they have

THE BEST WHISKY IN THE WORLD. Yet this does not prevent hundreds from getting drunk every Saturday night and making the night hideous with their singing and shouting. New Years Eve, or Hogmanay as it is called here, is the Fourth of July for the Scotchman, the one great day of the year; and I suppose no true son of a Douglas would refuse to drink every time he is invited to on this night. While in the city I had the pleasure of witnessing their celebration of this night, and to one not over fastidious it is one of the most interesting sights ever seen. About eleven o'clock at night I went to High street where there were forty or fifty thousand people assembled, filling the streets as far as I could see. The crowd was so dense as to almost prevent one from getting through it and no vehicles of any description were allowed on the streets. The sight was as wild and weird as different colored lights shining through a dense fog upon a crowded street could produce. Everyone was drunk or on the shortest road to that condition. The drinking was not confined to the men alone, but young and old women, little boys and girls all alike were engaged in the celebration in the fullest sense of the word. Those who were not already too drunk were shouting and singing as wildly as if this was the only good time in the year, while here and there were squads of men and women apparently, though in an unamated way, trying to SQUEEZE EACH OTHER TO DEATH. By locking hands, forming a circle with a few women in it and then diminishing the size of the circle, and this process was in various places carried on in a much smaller though no less pretentious way. In fact it looked like a huge hugging match where all decorum and modesty had vanished, and I think Dante must have at some time in his life been in Edinburgh on Hogmanay. The policemen paid no attention to the crowd other than to see that no one was trampled upon, and they kindly carry those who had gone to sleep on the streets into some out of the way place where, covered only with the fog and darkness, they could calmly, sweetly sleep, all the same as the just and innocent are supposed to do by many inexperienced persons. When the clock struck twelve there was a prolonged, demoniacal shout, and general shaking of hands, followed by the crash of breaking bottles, indicating, I suppose, that the sturdy Scot had sworn off until next time. The crowd now began to disperse and I went home to bed. But ever and anon through the night I was awakened from my slumbers by the shrill notes of the bag pipe or the uproarious shouting and singing on the streets.

The next day the city was as quiet as a country town on Sunday, and the pious Scots went to church. I have noticed that they are very pious here on Sundays. In the morning after their celebration I went to the hospital expecting to see a long array of broken heads, but was disappointed.

VERY FEW ACCIDENTS AND FIGHTS. Having occurred. This at least speaks for the Scotchman. This celebration seems to be a relic of Scottish barbarity and aside from it life in Edinburgh does not differ much from that of other cities.

I left this city with many regrets, for the universities, libraries, museums and hospitals are the finest in the world. The Scottish people are as sociable as ever found any where, and then for a student Edinburgh has many attractions. But life is short and I left for London on my way to the continent.

LONDON IS THE DIRTIEST CITY. In the world. There were days while I was in the city, during which the smoke and fog were so dense as to stop all vehicles from running, though the street lamps were lighted all the day. It was so dark I was almost afraid to venture out on the streets for fear of losing my way. In the houses the gas was kept burning all day long, but even with this aid, reading was both difficult and disagreeable. The smoke crept into the houses and rooms through every crack and crevice, smarting the eye, irritating the throat and making everything so dark and gloomy that life to me was like a horrid dream following a late supper when crab salad had been partaken of too freely. In the morning I might go forth adorned with clean collar and cuffs, and by noon I would look as if I had been at work for a week in a coal mine. But it takes dirt to make a world, and London is a world by itself. Here no large gatherings such as are seen in Edinburgh or Hogmanay are ever allowed, for a crowd in London has its weekly riots in spite of all police precautions, yet there is this good thing about them, one does not hear of them until they are over. I am quite sure that they COULD HAVE TWO OR THREE RIOTS. In different parts of the city in one day and one half of the inhabitants would not know of it until reading their paper the next morning. The city is so large that the east end knows no more of the west end—nor as much as they would—than if they were two separate cities. To me, London is a wonder. With its immense wealth, unequalled poverty, magnificent hotels and theaters, grand museums, hospitals and libraries, lovely parks and handsome palaces, it is, indeed, a world by itself. Everything the world produces is found here, and here are to be seen people from every nation and clime. The spectator, adventurer, student, philosopher, millionaire and pauper all come to London, and each finds something to interest and keep them here.

While in the city I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Inayatullah, a native of Panjab, India, who is one of the most pleasant and thoroughly educated men I have ever met. He had left his home in India and come to London to study, graduated at Cambridge with the highest honors, was called to the bar in London and acquitted himself so creditably all his examinations as to win admiration and esteem from all who knew him, and is looked upon by the legal profession as one of the brightest men of the day. He refused tempting offers to remain in London, and goes to his native home in India where, on account of his superior learning and ability, he will doubtless at once take a prominent position in his profession, as well as be a leader in politics in which, he informs me, are questions of increasing importance arising every day, and that England, ere long, will have an Indian question as well as an Irish one, which will require the highest order of statesmanship to successfully meet. He also informed me that a great many of his countrymen are at present coming to England for the purpose of study. Not alone for the professions, but for science, art, engineering, etc., and what is just as interesting, that nine out of ten of them who are not married when they come here soon succumb to the charms

OF ENGLAND'S FAIR DAUGHTERS. And on returning home, take with them an English bride. This, I have no doubt, will do more towards educating the native Indian women and freeing them from their present condition of bondage than a host of missionaries sent for that purpose. Right here an idea occurs to me, which I gladly offer to the missionary societies of America. That is, instead of sending so many old maids soured by dyspepsia and time, into heathen (?) India as is their custom, they send pretty, ambitious young women of which America is full, and allow them the privilege, or rather, make it a duty for them to marry their first respectable and wealthy male convert. Of course they would at once convert a prince or nabob, and when they have accomplished this it will certainly give them unequalled opportunities for doing missionary work. This idea I do not intend to copyright and the aforementioned societies may use it or not just as they in their wisdom may see fit.

Everywhere in London are to be seen monuments erected in memory of the various wars wherein the British soldiers were victorious, and in the museum are relics captured from the different countries that have opposed them. They seem to build as great a monument for a victory achieved over the poorly armed African or Indian as for Crimean; and when their soldiers won a victory over the poor, heathen Barmese, the banners blowed about it as if it was something wonderful, and proved that the English soldier is invincible. I looked and enquired carefully for some monument commemorative of a victory over the Americans, but found none, and took pleasure in asking the conceited Englishmen, "What have your soldiers really done to blow about, anyway?"

Catarrh to Consumption. Catarrh in its destructive force stands next to and undoubtedly leads on to consumption. It is therefore singular that those afflicted with this fearful disease should not make it the object of their lives to rid themselves of it. Deceptive remedies concocted by ignorant pretenders to medical knowledge have weakened the confidence of the great majority of sufferers in all advertised remedies. They become resigned to a life of misery rather than torture themselves with doubtful palliatives.

But this will never do. Catarrh must be met every step and combated with all our might. In many cases the disease has assumed dangerous symptoms. The bones and cartilages of the nose, the organs of hearing, and of seeing, are so affected as to be useless. The ureters so elongated, the throat so inflamed and irritated as to produce a constant distressing cough, and a constant and distressing sore throat.

SANDWICH'S RADICAL CURE meets every phase of Catarrh, from a simple head cold to the most loathsome and destructive stages. It is local and constitutional. Instant in relieving, permanent in curing, safe, economical and never-failing. Each package contains one bottle of the RADICAL CURE, one box CATARRH SOLVENT, and an IMPROVED INHALER, with treatment price $1.00.

POTTER DRUG & CHEMICAL CO., BOSTON. KIDNEY PAINS. And that weary, lifeless, all-gone, senescent ever present with those of inflamed kidneys, weak back and joints, aching hips and sides, overworked or worn out by disease, debility or dislocation, are relieved in one minute and speedily cured by the SANDWICH'S RADICAL CURE. A new, original, elegant and infallible antidote to pain and inflammation. At all druggists, 50c; five for $2.00; or of POTTER DRUG CO., Boston.

It is for your own interest as much as for mine to do your trading with me.
