A MINER'S STORY.

The following story is given a reporter of the San Francisco Examiner by a gentleman by the name of J. D. Manely, claiming to hail from Spokane Falls. The story may or may not be true but is worthy of reproduction:

"Coeur d'Alene has a remarkable history," remarked Mr. Manely to an Examiner representative, growing reminiscent. "I don't believe there ever was such a mining excitement, not even excepting California's '49 days as there was in Coeur d'Alene in '83. I was one of the first to go in and I had a good opportunity to observe the manners of people, who rushed in wild with excitement for they expected pulling out a fortune in a month or two, and I can truly state that I never in my life saw a more avaricious class of human beings than those who gathered there from every portion of the continent.

The excitement first began in the fall of '82, but an invasion was postponed until the spring of '83, as the snow was too deep over the mining surface to do any mining during the winter. Well into the spring, it was about March, they came in early to take up claims and then await the disappearance of snow. I must tell you a story which has a strong inclination toward romance. It was in the month I mentioned—the month of March—that a meeting was held in James Dove's saloon to consider a proposition. There is a superstition among miners that until a child is born in camp luck will hang about the outskirts and refuse to come where the miners want it most. Tom Jefferson—as noble a hearted soul as ever lived—who had passed through the stirring times of Leadville and the Black Hills, told the men that they would not take out an ounce until a child was born among them. Well, the meeting I spoke of was held to consider this important question, and what reward should be paid on the child on its birth."

"Tom, for a miner, rough, but of splendid temperament, made a rattling speech that magnetized the men, who cheered and voted that $5,000 be the amount. An advertisement was given to the stage driver, who took it to Spokane and had it inserted in the Spokane Falls Times."

"As the story goes, a week or two after this advertisement appeared in the paper it fell into the hands of the wife of a brakeman on the Northern Pacific who lived at Duñcan, Montana. Her husband had left early in the morning to make his trip that lasted two days, and left her several papers to read. They were in very poor circumstances, and had scarcely the means to protect them from the bitter cold weather. She was approaching maternity, and when the paper fell into her hands a queer sensation came over her. The advertisement must be for her, she thought. It was then about nine o'clock in the morning, and the westward bound train passed at ten o'clock. When that hour arrived she was the only passenger who boarded the train at Duñcan. She got off at Thompson Falls, Montana. A stage ran from there to Coeur d'Alene through the Bitter Root mountain country. The day was bitter cold, but she wrapped up warmly and took a seat on the sled with the driver, she being the only passenger. Though much surprised to hear that she was going into the rough mining district, the driver—a kind hearted man, made her as comfortable as possible, and started at a quick pace. The drive was a terrible one, and before they arrived at the only stopping place between the station and the mines the lady had fainted, or at least was unconscious from the cold. She was taken in and when she had recovered she insisted on continuing the journey. On they went, but they had proceeded only a few miles when she was again benumbed, and the driver laid her gently in the bottom of the sleigh and covered her up with robes, reserving only one for his own comfort.

After a fearful drive they arrived in camp at 12 o'clock at night, and soon every man was aroused with the report that a lady had come in on the stage and that she was nearly frozen. A warm house was provided for her and Tom Jefferson went in to see her. He came out in a minute and asked if there was a doctor in the crowd. An elderly man stepped forward and announced that he was a physician and went inside. Half an hour afterward the first child was born in camp. Anxious miners were awaiting to hear of her recovery, and when the announcement was made of the birth of the infant the honest faces of the miners assumed a very grave appearance, and whispers were round that the man who had taken in that innocent critter should be hanged. The doctor returned to his patient and she revived for the first time since her arrival. Sufficient strength remained for her to hold up her hand and show the engagement ring."

"When the fact was made known to the miners that the child was a legitimate one, satisfaction was never so enthusiastically expressed. The miners went wild over the instance and Jim Dove never did a bigger business in his life than he did that night. Next day the house in which the infant was born was surrounded by miners. They made the day a holiday. Some enjoyed themselves constructing a rude cradle, which the infant—a boy—was put into; others brushed themselves up to make a good appearance for their presentation to the lady who had brought luck to the camp. When she had related her story not only $5,000 was turned over to her offspring, but the cradle was the receptacle of thousands of dollars of gold, which the miners would drop in as they would gaze smilingly at the baby boy, trying to claim its recognition. They nearly smothered it with gold, and at night held another mass meeting at which a claim was voted the child. This claim was worked for the kid by the miners, and proved to be the richest in the Coeur d'Alene region. The brakeman was informed of the whereabouts of his pretty wife, and he quit braving and went to mining. The child is now four years of age—a happy, wealthy and robust boy.

Three weeks ago at Kimes' Postoffice, near Bannister, Idaho, the snow was twenty-two feet deep. The inhabitants dug tunnels from house to house. When it commenced to snow a large number of cattle were lying down by a stack. They were completely covered up, and it was thought by the owners that they were still there eating hay.

Babies That are fretful, peevish, cross, or troubled with Windy Colic, Teething Pains, or Stomach Disorders, can be relieved at once by using Acker's Baby Soother. It contains no Opium or Morphine, hence is safe. Price 25 cents. Sold by
