PRAIRIE DOGS.

Forty Colonists Settle a Town—How They Worked.

An addition to the zoological collection at the arsenal in Central Park has just been completed in the rear of the arsenal, near the bear pit that is being cut out of the rock, and is attracting much attention. The new feature is a little strip of land thirty feet long and nearly half as wide, inclosed with an iron railing radiating with a new coat of green paint. At first the visitor may see nothing in the inclosure but the bare yellow earth, thrown into rough little mounds in several places. If he lingers a moment several lumps of what appeared the soil will spring into life, and presently a whole colony of prairie dogs will issue out from their underground dwellings and frolic around. At any unusual sound they whisk into their holes in an instant and are out of sight. The site of the Prairie Dog Town was of late completed. It was prepared by digging a basin, the sides and bottom of which were lined with concrete, and the whole then filled up with fifteen feet of earth. When the soil had settled, it was ready for the colony to enter into possession, and the green railing prevented the colonists from straying outside of town limits.

There are forty of the dogs owned by the park authorities. They were obtained from Nebraska last spring, and have been kept in a cage in one of the buildings until Dr. Conklin, Superintendent of the Menagerie, could prepare better quarters for them. Dr. Conklin told the Park Commissioners that the best way to care for the animals was to make for them a home as nearly like their own as possible, and that it could be done at small expense. When the dogs were turned into the inclosure they frisked about the space a few moments in evident surprise. Then they gathered in a knot for consultation, in which one fat old patriarch seemed to assume the leadership. They grasped the situation, and determined to make the best of it. The old dog, followed by six other stout dogs, selected a central spot in the inclosure, and began to dig with his forepaws, until in a minute or two his head was out of sight. He then stepped aside and gravely sat on his haunches, while another dog began digging in the hole thus started. The progress of the work, and after the foreman of the work had inspected the tunnel several times the colony then divided into groups, each group selecting a spot and going to work to burrow on its own account. Five of them, with the old dog, continued to work at the first burrow. During the afternoon each of the groups made its own home underground, and they all went to rest in these holes at night. One day they were busy rounding out their halls and carrying in large quantities of grass, which was given them to line the passages. Crowds of visitors watch the busy workers. The animals are smaller than the woodchuck. They live socially together, and never appear to quarrel. Occasionally they utter a sharp, low yelp. It is said that on the prairies owls and rattlesnakes often make quarters in their burrows.

"They are intelligent, interesting little creatures, and quite harmless," said Dr. Conklin. "That old gray fellow seems to be a kind of leader among them. The first hole that they dug, in which he lives, is the largest, and seems to be a sort of city hall, where they all assemble at times. The holes probably go down about fifteen feet, where they are stopped by the concrete. The dogs will live out here comfortably all winter. Their holes will be snug and warm, and they are not troubled with malaria."—(New York Tribune.)

John Jacob Astor.

Speaking of John Jacob Astor, the first, I cannot help realizing the memory of conversations I have heard between him and my father when I was a boy.

"People think," said the old man, "that I have had an easy time of it, but that's a mistake. My early life was a hard struggle, and even my own brother refused to lend me money."
This brother was a butcher named Henry, pretty well off, with a stall in the Bare Market—or Bear Market as it got to be afterwards called—and worked under John Jacob's borrowings. One day, when the latter went to him for $200, Henry said: "John, I'll willingly give you $100 if you will promise me that you will never come to me again to borrow."
"I closed with the offer at once and took the money," said Mr. Astor, laughing heartily.

I have heard him tell how he got his first start in life. He kept his store in Peck Slip, and there bought furs, almost any that were offered him, until he had a stock packed away that he could not realize on. What to do he did not know, but consulting with his wife, as he always did about everything, the conclusion was that he should go to London and sell them himself. This was carried out and John Jacob carried his furs to London and made a good thing of it. While there, and wandering over the great city, he came across what was known as the East India House, or Company, and recognized a name as chief of it as one familiar. He sought him and found a schoolmate in his native place in Germany. His schoolmate did not repudiate him, but tried to dissuade him, and even offered Astor a place in the office of the company, but he would not accept of it, and among the rest, when he was leaving gave him a permit for a ship to trade in the China Seas. John Jacob laughed at the gift, but took it and had almost forgotten its possession, when one day something he heard made him go to a merchant named Livermore and propose that he find capital to fit out a ship and use the permit and they should share the result. Livermore, at first rejecting the proposal, afterwards accepted it, and the voyage was successfully undertaken, and from it Astor realized $50,000. Then he took the permit and fitted out a vessel himself and laid the foundation of his enormous fortune. John Jacob never denied that he owed his success in a large measure to the fact that he always consulted with his wife, whom I remember as a clear-headed, practical woman.—(N. Y. Graphic.)

Seemingly Eradicated
With repeated and powerful doses of quinine, emulsions and other medicinal forms, springs into active existence again, often without the slightest apparent provocation. To extinguish the smoldering embers of this obstinate and recalcitrant malady, no less than to subdue it when it rises to a feverish height, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is all sufficient. When every resource of the pharmacopoeia has been exhausted against it in vain, the Bitters conquers it—will remove every lingering vestige of it. Nay, more, the Bitters will protect those brought within the influence of malarial fevers, and their malarial disease, from its attacks. Disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, are among the complications to be apprehended from the use of malarial fevers. These are both cured and prevented by the Bitters. Rheumatism, constipation and renal complaints, yield to its action.

Absurdities.
The names of some well-known French dishes are absurd enough when translated. Here are some specimens: "Omelette Panore," eggs bunched like Aurora; "Sauce au petit deuil," sauce in half mourning; "Salmi de chasseurs," a hash of hunters; "Bouchees de dames," mouthfuls of ladies; "Compote de bon Chriens," a stew of good Christians; "Eperians en cornets," smelts in dice boxes; and so on ad absurdum.

A little boy, hearing someone remark that nothing was quicker than thought, said, "I know something that is quicker than thought." "What is it, Johnnie?" asked his papa. "Whistling," answered Johnnie. "When I was in school yesterday I whistled before I thought."
