A TOWHOY WOMAN.
The importance of breaking news gently in this section of the country, says an exchange, was well illustrated here a few days ago when Dave Kelly, a new comer went up to inform Mrs. Pike Baldwin that she was a widow. Pike had been up the creek with some of the boys, and the boat becoming unmanageable in the high water, he and the others had been thrown out. All got ashore except Pike, but it was a hard job. The current was very swift, and it is thought that he probably was thrown against a rock and injured. Dave Kelly came along just as the boys were picking themselves out of the water, and, as they were too exhausted to do more than crawl to their cabins, he got the job of conveying the news to Mrs. Baldwin, a frontier lady who has something of a record. On approaching the house Dave thought long and earnestly on the best way of communicating the information, and at length came to the conclusion that the direct method was preferable to any other. He therefore stepped up briskly, and seeing Mrs. Baldwin at the door of the cabin said:
"I am sorry to say, Mrs. Baldwin, that Pike was drowned this morning up the creek."
"Drowned?" she said, with a curl of her lip.
"Yes, ma'am," replied Dave, who already began to feel uncomfortable.
"You're a liar!" she said, emphatically. "Pike can swim like a fish, and you can't drown a fish, nor Pike neither. So go 'long now, or I'll hit you!"
"But, Mrs. Baldwin—"
"But nothing. You go now, or I'll drown you in a shotgun. Pike can't be drowned. Who sent you here with that lie?"
"The boys on Stoner's ranch. They were all with Pike in a boat, and the boat upset and they all got ashore except Pike. He was drowned and—"
Just then a mop that was standing near the door fell on Dave's head, and he sank to the ground, while Mrs. Baldwin, over him, yelled:
"Didn't I tell you not to say that again? You git out of this now, before I use an iron on you. Pike's all right. If I thought he could be drowned I'd never have put up with him this long. You go and tell the boys down at Stoner's to eat some hay. My Pike's a better man than any of them. When there's any drowning to be done I'll bet you $5 that some of them pan-handle pilgrims will go to soak before he does. Are you going to climb?"
Dave made off on a run, with the widow after him, and he did not stop until he had reached the ranch, where some of the boys had already taken Pike's remains, they having been found down the stream a ways. After telling his story, the crowd listening intently, Dave was told by old man Lotus to go off somewhere and die.
"Don't you know any better than that, you idiot?" he said, showing some warmth near the collar.
"There's only one way to inform a widow of the death of her husband, and that is to take his body along with you. Probably you don't remember how Wasatch Charlie got that handsome jaw on him. He went to tell a woman on the Sawtooth range that her husband had been killed in a fist-fight. The woman was insulted, and having a six-shooter handy, and Charlie being very mournful and persistent, she let him have it in the jaw. He got away, but he has a poor jaw now. There was another man who learned something, I guess. He lived in Idaho, and he took a dead man home in his wagon. Thinking to break the news gently, he said:
"Where is your husband?"
"He's down in the timber cutting firewood."
"No, he ain't."
"Well, he's over to Boget's, playing cards."
"No, he ain't, neither."
"Look here, stranger," said the woman, drawing a 45-caliber revolver, "just you produce the old man now, mighty quick, or I'll make a lead mine out of you!"
"Under those trying circumstances, the poor fool had to show what he had in the box, and, of course, the woman killed him.

She said she knew some terrible tough men, but that fellow was the first one who would kill a woman's husband and then go to her house and call her a liar. She was acquitted, too."
"Now, the thing to do with Pike, here, is to wait until dark and then carry him over to the house and leave him there unbeknownst. Some women are mighty touchy, and it's foolish to rile 'em up. Just you leave Pike over there, and after a little she'll come down and want to know all about it. Then you can tell her that he was drowned, or that a mountain fell on him, just as you please. From what I know of life and death out here, I should be inclined to take the mountain story."
The old man's advice was followed, and the widow was not only convinced of Pike's death, but she took a mournful satisfaction in the reflection that he had not been drowned.

The storm of a week ago Saturday, says the Pacific Journal, caused so much damage to some trappers at Ilwaco that they are unable to resume business. Complete ruin visited several parties entailing a loss of anywhere from $800 to $1,500, but as it is all they have, they must quit business.

SAFE, SURE, AND SPEEDY.
No external remedy ever yet devised has so fully and unquestionably met these three prime conditions as successfully as ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. They are safe because they contain no deleterious drugs and are manufactured upon scientific principles of medicine. They are sure because nothing goes into them except ingredients which are exactly adapted to the purposes for which a plaster is required. They are speedy in their action because their medicinal qualities go right to their work of relieving pain and restoring the natural and healthy performance of the functions of muscles, nerves, and skin.

Last Thursday Thomas Sullivan was tried and convicted of manslaughter in stabbing Merrill Blanchard to death last Christmas at Rainier, and was sentenced to a term of twelve years in the penitentiary. Sullivan killed Blanchard on account of a beating he received at Blanchard's hands the day previous. Sullivan at the time was on a drunken spree. He seems satisfied at getting off as easy as he did.
