ONE KIND OF AMERICAN.
Southwestern Missouri has developed a type of careless individuality little different from the conventional unconcern of the "old-time" Arkansaw squatter. A traveler on horseback, who had been out all day in the chilling rain, stopped late in the night at a small stone house situated at the top of a bleak knob. After the traveler had shouted until he feared that his throat had been permanently damaged, the door opened with a creak that echoed down the "hollow."
"Mister," the traveler began, "I am as wet as a dog, and—"
"Must av been in the rain," the native broke in, opening the door a little wider and poking out his head a little further.
"Yes, since 5 o'clock this morning."
"Got er putty early start, I low."
"Pretty early! Yes, I've been out in the rain since 5 o'clock, and—"
"Rainin' when you started, I reckon."
"Yes, but my business was so urgent that I had to leave—"
"What business are ye in?"
"I am a dealer in salt, and—"
"Reckon that about all yer've got with yer is melted by this time."
"Got none with me, of course. My friend, I don't like to put you to any inconvenience, but you see—"
"Kain't say that I do. Mout of it wasn't so all-fired dark."
"I say, you must know—"
"Didn't. Yer said I see."
"Well, that makes no difference. I am as wet as a dog and am very cold, and if you can't do anything else for me, let me come in and give me a drink of water, for I am as dry as a powder horn."
"Thought yer waz ez wet ez er dog."
"I am."
"Then how ken yer be ez dry ez er powder horn?"
"Here, let us do away with these quibbles. I am in distress, and want you to help me."
"Don't be no ways back'ards; he'p yerse'f."
"You are certainly a tough customer."
"That's what Eli Bragg, the miller, says when he tries to cheat me."
"I don't care a cent what Eli Bragg says, I—"
"Me nuther."
"Look here."
"Wall."
"May I get off my horse and come in?"
"Ef yer come in I reckon yer'll have to get offen yer horse."
"Well, in case I come in, what must I do with my horse?"
"Leave him outside, I reckon."
"Haven't you got any shelter for your stock?"
"No."
"Doesn't the bad weather nearly kill them?"
"No."
"How do you account for it?"
"Ain't got no stock."
"Haven't you got as much as a smoke house to give shelter to my horse?"
"Got no smoke house. All the smoke we want we get in here."
"Suppose I lead him through this gate and turn him loose in this lot?"
"All right."
The traveler turned his horse loose and entered the house. The host raked the chunks together and soon a bright blaze sprang up in the fireplace. He did not stop at this small attempt to make his guest comfortable, but brought him a "hunk" of corn-bread and the boiled foot of a hog.
"I am deeply thankful to you."
"Not er tall."
"I suppose there is room enough in the lot to enable my horse to walk around and keep warm?"
"Oh, yaa."
"I am glad that I wasn't compelled to tie him, fearing that he might break loose and go back sixty miles, to the place from which I started this morning. I have only lost my road, but doubtless he knows well enough where he is. He is a very valuable animal. So you say he's got plenty of room?"
"Oh, yaa."
"How many acres are in the lot?"
"Don't know."
"How far from one fence to the other?"
