Spirited Difference of Opinion.

The education of Kentucky youth is not neglected even in the finer points of etiquette. Professor Clarke, a friend of higher education and superintendent of public schools at Henderson, Kentucky, paid an official visit to the high school at that place last week. He was received by Professor Thomas Posey, principal of the high school, with true southern courtesy, and taken through the rooms. Professor Clarke expressed great satisfaction until Professor arithmetic class was Master Tommy Corwin being ealled on for recitation, began: "Two times two are four-" Is four, " gently interrupted Professor Clarke; "two times two is "Are four, Tommy," corrected Professor Posey, with some asperity. At this direct snub Professor Clarke flushed, then turned pale, and reached back toward his coat-tails as he rose from his seat. But Professor Posey had the advantage of being already on his feet. He pulled his gun and fired at Professor Clarke, dropping him so neatly that he never stirred. -Are four, Tommy," repeated Professor Posey. The affair bas cast a gloom over Henderson, but the citizens do not see how Professor Posey could have acted otherwise than he did.
