ASTORIA, OREGON:

JULY 10, 1887 BUNDAY

Less than twenty-five miles of distance remain unbridged by rail between the great states of California and Oregon.

NEVER again, says the Grass Valley, Cal., Tidings, will the salmon run the rivers here as they once did. This is a fish that civilization kills. Cities sewer into the streams, land is cultivated on the banks of streams and loosened soil is washed into the running water and thousands of other defilements follow where man is located, and so certain fishes give way. It is the same way with the buffalo of the plains, the red deer of the prairies and forests and with many game quadrupeds and birds. The trout fish of the Truckee river and traffic on the Pacific coast except the P. M. S. S. Co. He owned of our mountain lakes will not survive sawdust and civilization for many years, and trout will be succeeded by carp and catfishor some tunity. He came to Oregon in 1868, other fish that has the nature of a hog. This applies wholly to the Sacramento and partially to the Columbia, where the run can even yet be insured for future years.

Ir is good to know a court has at last been found to upset the old-fashioned fallacy that is better that ninety and nine guilty men should es cape than that one innocent man should be convicted. This moss-(Adams vs. the People, 109 Ill., 451,) held that an instruction was Ben Holladay of former years. persons should escape than that one innocent person should suffer; because, first, there is no policy of the law upon the subject or for the consideration of the jury; and, section of the jury; and the jury consideration of the jury; and, secondly, it is not within the purpose of the law that any guilty person should escape, or any innocent one be convicted. The question for the consideration of the jury is the guilt or innocence of the accused, and it is not for them to inquire what is politic to do. The proposition is a very reasonable one and the decision will doubtless meet with the approval of all legal authorities.

DEATH OF BEN HOLLADAY.

The Man Who Was Once the Autocrat Of Oregon.

The death of Ben Holladay, which ook place at St. Vincent's hospital in Portland last Friday evening, recalls reminiscences of a man well known to most Astorians, a familiar figure on our streets, and one of the most prominent men in the country. Born in Kentucky nearly seventy years ago, he had amassed a fortune in Kansas at the breaking out of the Mexican war by successful cattle trading, going thence to Utah, where his name as a bold speculator is still a house-hold word. From there he went to California, made and lost big money on big contracts, put on and coined money in his famous overland stage line, operated two lines of steamers between northern and southern Pacific coast ports, dipped into mines, handled millions, was a financial power, strong, imperious, hostile, un-giving, great in his hates and friendships, and at the zenith of prosperity. Twenty years ago he was the king pin: his word was law, his endorsement sufficient, his frown condemnatory. He had let go of his stage business at a big figure and was the controller of all water traffic con the Paris of the stage. everything everywhere that turned a wheel, made and unmade men, and dainfully refusing to have a line thrown out from his vessel to a dock at Astoria, spent money lavishly and generously, built a magnificent struct-ure at the Seaside, guided and di-rected all his great affairs as became a lordly mind that was dominant in its invisidation.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris. Tex., by the re-markable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. Kings's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two buttles of the Discovery. bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six

A Strange Monster

Sturgeon fishermen at Bayside, N. J., have captured what is called "a strange monster." It was about six feet long, and seven feet wide, counting its fangs, and seven feet wide, counting its fangs, and weighed about 500 pounds. It was black as ink, had a head resembling a lion's, and was spotted undeneath like a leopard.
