A FATAL DELUSION.

The Fancied Security and Appalling Perils of People Revealed.

The eminent scientist and author, Dr. Joseph F. Edwards of Philadelphia, relates the following wonderful experiences:

"During my term as resident physician in the medical wards of the Philadelphia Hospital, it was a common occurrence for an ambulance call to be received from one of the down town station houses. Upon reaching the place designated, we would be shown a man or woman who has been found unconscious on the street and supposed to be intoxicated. He would be removed to the hospital, where he would linger unconscious for twenty-four or twenty-six hours, and then die. In a majority of these cases a post-mortem examination would reveal a most horrible state of affairs which I will explain hereafter."

"A lady in apparently good health, who rarely complained, and then only occasionally, of some slight and transient ill-feeling, as nearly every one does at some time or other, took a long walk with her husband, and upon returning home, feeling particularly well, went to her room to remove her bonnet, and, while standing in front of the mirror, fell to the floor in a convulsion, followed by twenty-four hours of unconsciousness and death without a return to consciousness. A post-mortem examination revealed the true cause in a most horrible form."

"A young married man for years suffered from dyspepsia, for which he consulted many physicians. After suffering in this way, and having no other symptoms of disease, he awoke one morning to find a very slight swelling, scarcely more than a puffiness under one eye. In less than a month he was dead."

Now the real and terrible cause of all these deaths was Bright's disease of the kidneys, and they might all have been avoided had the unfortunate victims known what a horrible malady was fastened upon them. But Bright's disease has no symptoms of its own. It steals into the system like a thief, and deceives its victims by showing the symptoms of nearly every other disease.

But what can be done? Take it in time.

If you feel unaccountably tired; if you have peculiar pressing pains; if your appetite is uncertain; if your head aches occasionally; if your sleep is irregular; if the fluids passed are profuse or scanty, do not delay, but use the best known means for escaping agony and death before it is too late.

For this purpose there is a remedy, and the only one that has ever proven absolutely certain.

Hunt's Remedy has never been equaled, and it is the only absolute one known to the medical profession. There are thousands of men and women to-day who enjoy perfect health who would be in their graves had it not been for this wonderful remedy, and there are thousands of others who require it without an hour's delay. This is no idle statement, but truth drawn from cases which are beyond question.

HE HAD REFORMED

And Wanted a Chance to Live Honestly.

A peculiar case came up before the San Francisco police court last Saturday. Persons who have ever become interested in the history of Jean Valjean, as told in Victor Hugo's Les Miserables, will note a slight comparison between that and the history of a business man as told below. Last Tuesday a well-dressed man registered at the Palace as J. M. House, of Chicago.

He appeared to have considerable money, and to attach to the hotel stated he was on his way to Australia, he being a member of an American and Australian manufacturing company of Chicago.

He paid his bills promptly, and early Friday morning bought a ticket for Australia. He then paid his hotel bill and was conveyed to the wharf, where the steamer Mariposa was found ready to depart on her ocean voyage.

He placed his baggage on board, and returning to the wharf a short time after was surprised to see a detective who, exhibiting a warrant, arrested him on an embezzlement charge, preferred by one Samuel Nathan, and conveyed him to the city prison.

House was, of course, indignant, but when he saw the man at whose instance he was arrested, he bore his arrest with a quietly injured expression and actions that caused the officers to pity and sympathize for him, while at the same time they could not disabuse their minds of a suspicion that he was in some manner guilty of the offense charged.

Arriving at the courtroom, Nathan, through his attorneys, endeavored in every possible way to have the case postponed, but the judge who took occasion to remark that the case looked to him like an attempt at blackmail, ordered the examination to begin at once.

Nathan began by saying that about August 1, 1880, he roomed on Pine street, and was then, as he is now, a dealer in jewelry. At the time stated he had purchased a gold watch and chain from one Jonas, who is now dead. "This watch," continued he, "was taken from my store by defendant, House, who was a thief, then known as Julius Mailhouse. He offered to sell it for me, and said he could get $150 for it. I gave it to him, and he said he would return in an hour. Instead of doing so he went to Chicago, and I never saw him again until Thursday, when I met him on Kearney street. I then told him to give up my property or settle in some way. He refused, and then I had him arrested."

Detectives and policemen were then examined as to the character of Nathan. The testimony was all in one line, and that to the effect that Nathan was known to every officer in the city as a go-between for thieves; that his record was very low.

House was then called to the stand. He advanced quickly, threw himself back in a chair, and said in substance: "There is no use for me to deny it. I was once a thief, and operated with that man Nathan and another named Hugh Geary. This watch referred to was sold by Geary at the Alameda baths, about August 1, 1880. All three of us went over solely for the purpose of preying on the honest portion of the community. Geary picked the watch and of course one-third of its value belonged to me. Nathan took possession of the watch, but I got it afterwards, and lost it on poker in a gambling room. Then I left for Chicago, where I have lived ever since, and from that day to this I have been an honest man. I have risen step by step, and to-day occupy a position of trust and profit. This arrest was simply to extort money from me. It is an attempt at blackmail."

And with this the prisoner settled back to await cross-examination, which he knew would be bitter.

"Were you ever in prison?" asked the prosecuting attorney.

"I was; but where I decline to tell."

"Did you not serve a term at the house of correction?"

Witness was silent.

"Didn't you serve a term at the Joliet prison?"

"I decline to answer."

"Why so?"

"Because that doesn't affect the case. Let the past alone, is my motto. Be a man henceforth if you can."

Mary Alsop, once wealthy, wife of an old umbrella mender, was called and identified Mailhouse as the man House who had received the watch from Nathan seven years ago.

The court at this juncture took the case under advisement until Friday morning.

A Touching Obituary.

"Bill Skinner is dead," said a man coming into the office of a Dakota newspaper.

"Moses and thunder!" yells the editor, beginning to jump around the desk. "That old thief hasn't died, has he? I began to think the old fossil would live forever! He owed me four years' back subscription, but I am willing to lose it just for the satisfaction of knowing that the howling old hypocrite has gone where he will get what he deserves. Besides, if I went out and said a word about him the old woman and the boys would chase me off the place with a pitchfork. Got to give him an obituary, though, I suppose."

Then he sat down and wrote:

"It is with a heavy heart and lagging pen that we make the announcement that William Horatio Skinner is no more. For many years he has been a leading citizen of this place; a man honored, respected, large-hearted, able; a man who touched nothing that he did not adorn. This usually happy community is plunged into the deepest gloom by the sad event. But what is our loss is heaven's gain. Rest in peace! He was a kind husband and an indulgent father."—Dakota Bell.

SPINAL WEAKNESS AND LUNG TROUBLES.

56 PRINCE STREET, NEW YORK, March 25, 1884.

Having been troubled with pains in back and chest during the last winter I was compelled to remain at home unable to attend to business, until I was advised by a friend to try one of ALCOCK'S PLEURAL PLASTER. After applying one to my chest and one to my back, in three hours I found relief which I had not got in over three months. I cheerfully recommend them to persons having spinal weakness and lung troubles.
