A case of assault with intent to ravish came up a while ago in the Chenango county court. The defendant was a miserable coot, without money and without friends. The action had hung fire for some time, and the district attorney, becoming impatient, went to the defendant's counsel and asked when he would be ready to proceed with the trial. "What is it all about, anyway?" asked the counsel who had not examined the case. The district attorney related the particulars. "Has he got any money?" "I don't believe he has got a red cent," answered the defender of the people. "Well, by George," said the counsel for the prisoner, "if he did a thing of that kind and has no money, he
