

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1887

The Tacoma Ledger says that on the 4th of March, 1889, will be completed the century since the inauguration of the first president of the United States.

When a woman will she will, and that is all there is about it. The proverbial eagerness of women to learn a secret is exemplified in the Bay City, Mich., woman who disguised herself as a man and clerked in a store for a year, and thus obtained admission to the Knights of Pythias.

Advocates of prohibition say that an amendment is needed to the state constitution. What is more needed is an amendment to the man's own constitution. A man cannot be reformed by act of congress, and human nature is one of the things upon which even an Oregon legislature cannot legislate.

In a sandpit near Omaha two enormous teeth have been dug up. The naturalist who tells the story of their discovery says that they must have belonged to some animal that was at least "six times as large as the modern elephant," and that ate timber as a steady diet.

The Minneapolis Tribune, in view of the supposition that "every reader of a daily newspaper is often conscious that he knows much better how to run a paper so as to give general satisfaction than the editor himself," has invited its readers to contribute articles giving their views as to how a newspaper should be conducted.

In answer to inquiry, THE ASTORIAN states that it will give as much space to those desiring to give their views on prohibition as the paper itself editorially devotes to adverse argument regarding the advisability of that movement.

The impression seems to be partially received that Stanford, Crocker, et al., or what is the same thing, the Southern Pacific Railroad company contemplate the building of the railroad to Astoria. This impression is founded on misbelief.

Gloucester Schooners Coming This Way. Mr. William Stow, president of the Gloucester Net and Twine Co. of Boston, Mass., a frequent contributor to THE ASTORIAN, writes as follows: BOSTON, Oct. 5th, '87.

I observe by the Boston papers that four of the best Gloucester fishing vessels, schooner Herrick, Webster, Mollie Adby and W. D. Jordan, are going to the northern Pacific coast, fishing. They will carry an intelligent, experienced crew.
