Too High a Price For Longevity.

To make yourself miserable at forty, in the wretched ambition to add a few worthless years to your score after you have turned seventy or eighty, is surely a poor-spirited sort of game. To spend one's life feeling his pulse, looking at his tongue, and asking himself if he is treating his constitution quite fairly, is not life at all; it is to live in a hospital, or at any rate an infirmary.
There are some persons who are congenitally cautious, congenitally cold, congenitally calm. It is their nature to take things quietly, never to be in a hurry, never to excite themselves. They are content to sit in an easy chair for so many hours, read an agreeable book for so many hours, drive in a carriage when the weather is favorable for so many hours, and to regulate their existence by clock work. They may live to one hundred they may live to one thousand, but in truth, they have not lived at all. The man who really gets the best that can be got out of life is the man who, with a fairly good constitution to begin with, is ready to squander it at any moment and on every occasion in a sufficient cause. He keeps no account of profit and loss with his vital energy; he sees work to do, and does it; he sees pleasure to be endoes it; he sees pleasure to be en-joyed, and he enjoys it. He is alive all his life save when he sleeps; and he awakes from each slumber look-ing the world cheerfully and courageously in the face, and ready and even eager to be a combatant when there is a good honest fight, and a runne when there is a good honorable race afoot. He may not live to be one hundred, but he may well live to be seventy, seventy-five, or eveneighty. He may have a career inot so conspicuious, yet as active, as varied, and as restless as that, say, of Mr. Gladstone, and yet not be really old when time registers him among the aged. "Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathy," and better twenty years of uncalculated activity than the slow pulse and measured step of the circumspect snail that creeps surely on to one hundred. We are not denouncing centenarians. Very likely they deserve their length of years. But it would be a misfortune if it were ever thought an object of life to live very long. The object of life is to live, live generously, live bravely. As Shakespeare says, "Ripeness is all."—(Exchange.
