PORTLAND AND ASTORIA RAILROAD.

What the future of Portland is to be is a question that is just now attracting much attention and some solicitude. There will probably be something of a test for her to maintain the commercial supremacy in the future which she has enjoyed in the past. There will, perhaps, be elements and principles involved in the future business of the city very different from what have hitherto existed. Portland cannot be said ever to have had a rival or to have had any occasion to dread one. By accident almost she has become what she is. Thus far there has been nothing to say nay to her prosperity. None who have come here and entered into business have brought or added anything to her advantages; she had them all to begin with, supplied by nature, in the courses and confluences of streams, the location of mountain passes, the contiguity of the valleys, and her accessibility by ocean vessels. The productiveness and resources of the country created a commerce that required a central point as an emporium for the transaction of the business of the country, and Portland was adopted as the point that could supply the demand more conveniently than any other. For this reason merely, merchants have settled here and engaged in business. They have most usually been successful because there was a substantial business to be done and they were at the right point to engage in it. But the time has arrived when there appears to be an actual need that something be done in the interest and for the welfare of Portland; and we believe that most everybody recognizes the fact that something should be done, but no two persons seem to be agreed upon any one plan for preserving and advancing the interests of the city. To our mind there is nothing that will tend so much to dissipate and annul the railroad schemes and combinations to injure Portland, as the building of a railroad from Portland to Astoria. The mouth of the Columbia river is the equal, if not the superior of Puget sound as a seaport. The entrance to the mouth of the Columbia is not so hazardous as are the straits of Fuca and Puget sound. The distance across the Columbia bar is very short, only about a mile or less, while from the entrance of the straits of Fuca into the Sound is over a hundred miles. With proper care the entrance to the mouth of the Columbia is ample and sufficient, to say nothing of future improvements that are sure to be made there. The distance across the Columbia bar is so short that the actual service of towing a vessel in or out of the mouth of the Columbia is far less than towing through the straits of Fuca into Puget sound; so that, for actual cost, vessels can be towed into the mouth of the Columbia cheaper than into Puget sound. Besides the advantages of convenient railroad connection with the seaport at Astoria, it will be sure to result from the building of such a railroad that ample improvements and reduced towage will be made at the mouth of the Columbia, and it will cause the river channels from Astoria to Portland to be so improved that almost any sized vessel may come here at any time of the year. In our opinion the future great need of Portland is a seaport other than Puget sound, because at the latter place the Northern Pacific, which now seems hostile to Portland, is centering all its influence and power. It is useless for Portland to hope or expect anything from the arrogant Northern Pacific unless we are able first to defy it. As we suggested last week, it is highly probable that Portland can secure the Manitoba, (or Jim Hill,) railroad which is coming through the richest portion of eastern Washington territory to come to Portland via the Klickitat pass and crossing the Columbia at La Camas or Vancouver. With such railroads traversing eastern Washington territory and coming to Portland, and a railroad from Portland to Astoria as a seaport, we will be entirely independent and have commercial communications with every portion of the Pacific northwest, superior to every other point, and a seaport wholly dependent upon our trade and commerce, to do our ocean shipping. When the Astoria road is built and the Manitoba road is completed to Portland, then it will be in order to put up a fence between Portland and the Sound.—Oregon Siftings.

Remarks From Mrs. John L.

New York, March 11.—The Herald's East Centerville, R. I., special says: Mrs. John L. Sullivan is living quietly here with her mother, and when told the result of the fight, she said: "I'm glad of it. I wish Mitchell had killed him. He is great, but no good. He often told me he could do nothing unless he made a big assault at first and overpowered his man by his superior weight. Mitchell is a dodger, and he kept him at bay until he lost his wind, and then my brave John L. was wounded and helpless. He is a greatly overrated man. He will die a beggar, as he deserves to do for his ill treatment of me."
"Will you live with him again?"
"Never. If he was made of gold and there was another man in the world, I would not listen to him again."
"Do you propose to get a divorce?"
"Yes, as soon as I raise the mortgage on my house in Boston, which he contracted to pay off."
Failure of Handy & Co.
SAN FRANCISCO, March 11.—The firm of L. N. Handy & Co., coopers and dealers in fish, fish oils, furs and skins, made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors yesterday. The firm has long been in this city, being the first engaged in seal and walrus hunting on this coast. During the past two seasons several of the firm's sealing schooners have been seized by the United States revenue cutters in Behring sea for illegal hunting and their cargoes confiscated.
The firm has spent thousands of dollars endeavoring to get their vessels released and hiring attorneys to present their case before the United States circuit court and admiralty court in Boston, and bringing the matter to the attention of the president and cabinet; in fact, fighting the cause of private sealers against the claims of the Alaska Commercial company.
The fight was an unequal one and the firm had to succumb.
Call of The Labor Party.
INDIANAPOLIS, March 11.—The chairman of the national committee of the Union labor party has issued a call for the national convention at Cincinnati May 15. The basis of representation will be two delegates from each congressional district in the several states and territories, and two at large from each state. The call says in part: "This is not a movement of politicians intent on capturing the spoils of office. Let the coming convention be the nucleus for a grand federation of labor; let us agree upon essential principles common to all, and leave the details of opinion and theories to be settled in the respective state organizations, as the diversified interests of the country may demand."
Having in our official capacity as members of the Plymouth Hospital Committee been asked to test and prove the effectiveness of many different articles to be used as disinfectants in sickrooms and as preventives of infectious fevers, report that Darby's Prophylactic Fluid has been thoroughly tested during the recent Typhoid epidemic in this place. It proved most efficacious in staying the spread of the fever.
