NOT THE EDITOR FOR DAKOTA.

"Have you a newspaper here?" asked of a man who came over to where we were camped on the edge of a little Dakota town.

"Yes, got one; did have two, but the other feller pulled out, last week." "Didn't it pay?"

"Naw, he wan't no good-got out one of the weakest papers you ever seen." "What was the trouble with it?" "No news, or at least none to mount to anything. Course if omething hig happened that he couldn't help seein' he'd get it in, but ev'ry week there'd be a lot o' spicy things that he'd keep still's n mouse about, an' stick in a lot o' pieces on free trade, or protection, or melby sometimes the tariff. But the other man wan't that style-no blowin' pieces in his'n, but all the spicy an' interestin' news that happened."

"So you froze the long editorial man out?"

"Had to do it, I tell you-He didn't know enough to pound sand. W'y, lemme tell you a little case: Couple o' months ago I built me a new chicken coop—not a very big 'un cause I only got six hens an' a fightin' rooster— but I made it very keerful an' put in two round roosts an' whitewashed 'em an' three nests. I figured on half the hens restin' an' scratchin' while the other shift was layin', an' nailed some slats over a box in one corner to shut up the setters in, an' ness, an' fixed her up in style generally. Pretty soon old Cooper this man that's gone, come along an' I called him in an' sez I: 'Jes git onto the hen-house I been a buildin'.' 'That looks first rate, savs he. 'Wiggle it,' says I. He wiggled it, 'It 'pears solid,' says he. 'I claim it's the best hen-house in the city,' says I. 'Wouldn't wonder' says he. Then he walked off with his head down, a-thinkin I reckoned, what he should say 'bout it. Somehow I didn't manage to see the other feller to tell him bout it, but Lordy, how do you think it came out?" "Haven't any idea. How did "W'y sir, I went over to Hank George's and borrowed his copy of Cooper's paper soon's it come out-Hank hadn't got a look at it yet himself-an' took it home and waded through it but not a line 'bout my hen-coop! Not a line! Not a word! Didn't say nothin' bout it-my name wasn't in the paper! I went so far as to even read clear through a piece on 'Our Common School System' thinking mebby that he stuck in something bout my hen-house somewheres. but he hadn't. Well, I was mad, an' I think I had a right to be. 1 throwed the paper down an' didn't even take it back to Hank. But next mornin, when I see one of the other feller's papers down in the store my eyes stuck out so you could a hung your hat on 'em. There it was in his paper 'bout my Hardware and Ship Chandlery, hen-coop, big's a Mexican dollar! It read like this: 'We hear that uncle Abner Doty has jes' completed a large an convenient hen-house, for his fine flock of Shanghais, Bramahs, Plymouth Rocks an' so forth, together with his famous fightin' rooster, Ben Butler. We have not yet had the pleasure of samplin' any of the eggs laid in this new hen-house, but we know that uncle Abner is not the man to body wouldn't have nothin' to do with him an' he's left. You can see yourself that he couldn't very well do anything else after the way he used me on that hen-house." Chicago Letter.
