

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: SUNDAY, MAY 20, 1888. THE SHADOW IN HIGH PLACES.

The reigning families of Europe have recently had a large share of trouble. Probably no ruler of modern times has had a more unbearable affliction than that which overtook the late Republican president of France. It illustrates the inspired declaration that a man's foes shall be of his own household.

The German emperor went to his long home at the closing of a very long life without one word of reproach, nor with less than profound regret from all well-meaning subjects.

And now his son, the beloved "Unser Fritz" the present emperor, is dying slowly, and any hour is liable to see his sad demise, and the imperial mansion at Charlottenburg will after a brief period be reopened to receive an illustrious but inanimate visitor within its somber portals.

No greater reverses have befallen any ruling family than those which overtook that of Louis Napoleon. He died in exile. The only son of his widow was killed in a miserable African war, where he hopelessly sought distinction and found only death at the hand of savages.

THE MAKING OF PRESIDENTS

The making of presidents is an occupation in which our voting citizens are about to engage, and already the interest in the subject begins to be intense. Of course the newspapers have thus far been rather ahead of popular sentiment in this matter, but now I can see that the people are awakening for the impending campaign.
