and loaded the wagon and drove to town as proud as a king. My school teacher, Mr. Anderson, saw me and bought the wood and gave me some kind encounging words that I have never forgotten. My good mother watched me from the window as I went and as I came, and she was proud, too proud of her boy. I remember the love that was in her face and the watery glisten that was in her eyes as she looked at my silver dollar, and how she kissed my ruddy cheek and stroked my hair, and told me that it was honest money and would last. What a world of fond and innocent pride there is in a mother's heart; pride in her children, their looks, their conduct. their success. I kept on cutting wood in the new ground, and made more money, but the first
