French Affairs.

New York, February 12.—The Mail and Express' Paris cable says: Boulanger's journey to Anvers, it was given out, was simply for repose and recuperation. It is now ascertained that his real object was to secretly direct the officers of the Third army corps, which he commanded at the time of his dismissal from service and which is now stationed at Anvers. This looks dangerous for the republic and for France.

The feeling of the army is becoming more and more Boulangerist in temper. Officers do not scruple to openly declare that the time will come when the republican form of government will be overturned. Soldiers are allowed to put up portraits of Boulanger in their barracks, and they openly glory in their alleged future leader.
