PUBLIC LAND SURVEY.

How to Get a Survey Under the General Appropriation or Special Deposit System.

Owing to the great inquiry from settlers and others, relative to the survey of public lands the following is published as the two methods under which they are obtained, also the law regulating the same, and by which land officers are guided. The first method is under that which is known as the

An annual appropriation is made by congress for such purposes for the United States at large, and this sum is appropriated to the different states and territories by the commissioner of the general land office. The congress of the United States also fixes the rates of mileage allowed for surveys. Owing to inadequate appropriations for that purpose, it is frequently the case very few of the many petitions on file can be entertained; so that, when available funds are placed at officers disposal, they have to take into consideration the needs of the settlers in the different sections and advertise for bids where in their judgment the necessities are greatest. Under this method of obtaining surveys no special form of applica-tion is required; but before a survey is necessary that a petition for such survey be forwarded to the office of Washington, signed, so far as practicable, by all the actual settlers in the township, giving the number and range and general description of the character of the land. It should C. W. Haskins, of 776, Eleventh character of the land. It should character of the land.
