

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: SUNDAY, JUNE 2, 1889. A NOVELTY IN JOURNALISM.

INSTEAD of "the largest circulation," the newspaper of the greatest earthly dignity has "the smallest circulation in the world." It is the Austrian kaiser's chronicle—the most curious publication in Europe. Its proprietor is the emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, who publishes it for his sole benefit and not for that of the public.

The construction of the paper is as unique as the object. The imperial news bureau, which is almost a department of state, publishes it at a cost of 200,000 gulden yearly. The chief of the bureau, who is a high government official, is assisted by several sub-editors, each of whom is in turn assisted by a corps of trained clerks.

In due time, however, every paper has been read, and every article condensed, and now comes the last process in the construction of this strange paper. It is late at night, for the work is very heavy, and the paper must be ready for the emperor in the morning.

—All the patent medicines advertised in this paper, together with the choicest perfumery, and toilet articles, etc., can be bought at the lowest prices, at J. W. Conn's drug store, opposite Occident hotel, Astoria.

Good Stoves, cheap as the cheapest. JOHN A. MONTGOMERY.

THE SILENT GUEST.

THE Greeks, who were so inconsiderate as to anticipate a great part of the wit and wisdom of our times, have handed down to us a little story which we may name "The Silent Guest."

Don Piatt, writing of Salmon P. Chase, a few years ago, remarked that his cold, unimpulsive temperament, his dignified reserve, his fine presence and grave manner, "impressed the crowd, and created respect without liking."

These two anecdotes, Greek and American, suggest some points of special interest to ambitious persons. If a man is indifferent to the popular judgment, if he does not care to build up a reputation for exceptional wisdom, he can afford to be fluent or silent, jocular or grave, just as his mood at the moment may be.

But, in any case, the mask of silence must fall sooner or later. The great man will find urgent occasion to express himself in words or in actions; and, sooner or later, your "solemn ass" will be startled into an unmitigable bray.
