THE GOVERNOR'S CHASE.

The governor sat in his easy chair, a spyglass at his eye: "Has any one seen 3,000 men and a train of cars go by? A pilot train with the bad men on, one more and another one still; with rattle of wheels and clang of bell, and shriek of the whistle shrill? They travel not as the flying ship, in silence and in fear; they whoop and holler and howl and yell for all the world to hear. They have advertised the place of the fight for six long weeks or more, and I fear that I cannot find the place, till the brutal fight is o'er. Oh, rally and squander, my men of arms, and look if you may see where three railway trains and 18,000 men have hidden away from me."

They rallied and squandered, those men at arms, they searched the country through; and another governor came along and joined the searchers, too. They looked in the clock and under the stairs, and under the bed they peered, and out in the kitchen, and everywhere, but the trains had disappeared. They felt in their pockets and looked in their hats, and lowered a man down the well, but where all those slugs had disappeared to, there wasn't nobody could tell. They asked a boy at Lowery's store, and the woman who keeps the candy shop, but they hadn't seen nothin' at all. They dragged the pond at Sawyer's mill, and they questioned the toll gate man, and all through the lot at the back of his house, the governor raced and ran. But all in vain, for wherever he looked, went, the people he sought were gone, and the only place where he didn't look, was the fight was on. And he never knew where there had been a fight until a week and a day, then he sent a constable after the men, 4,000 miles away.

Long live the state of Massasip! The governor, long live he! If ever the moon should run away may he be there to see! Should hostile powers invade his land at some far distant day, may he find the foe that wastes his state before it goes away. And great good medicine had it been, for the land of the sunny south, had the governor closed his smoothbore eyes and looked with his long range mouth. -Bob Burdette in the Brooklyn Eagle.

A DUTY TO YOURSELF. It is surprising that people will use a common, ordinary pill when they can secure a valuable English one for the same money. Dr. Acker's English pills are a positive cure for sick-headache and all liver troubles. They are small, sweet, easily taken and do not grip. J. W. Conn, Druggist.
