Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Byron, (of Fernandina, Fla.) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

A FEARFUL SIGHT.

The Dissection of a Living Body.
The Incident Which Led Sir George Macdonald to Drop Surgery.

When the Duke of Sutherland was on his way to Florida last fall, he had with him a medical gentleman, who, besides his great knowledge of medicine, was a first-class raconteur. He amused the duke's party with many anecdotes of English celebrities. One day he told the following story to explain why Sir George Macdonald, the celebrated surgeon, had given up the practice of his profession for five years, just when five years' practice was most valuable to him.

"When Sir George Macdonald," he said, "began the practice of surgery the fates seemed to smile on him. From the time he entered Edinburgh university he was recognized as a man of genius, and the great eminence to which he has raised himself was confidently predicted, both by his professors and his fellow students. He knew that a few years after he was graduated a professional chair would be waiting for him, and in the more distant future were visions of honor and wealth incalculable. Suddenly it was reported through Edinburgh that Macdonald, the promising young surgeon, was suffering from nervous prostration, and then the news followed that he had thrown aside his brilliant career and would practice his profession no more. The news was true. One night Macdonald went home an enthusiastic surgeon. When next seen he was evidently borne down by some secret grief and the mention of a surgical operation seemed to fill him with horror. He went abroad and for five years he remained a wanderer without occupation. Then he was persuaded to return Edinburgh and resume his profession.

"In the days when the present Sir George was plain Dr. Macdonald, science had not taken the immense strides which it has since. The seekers of great truths were still groping in darkness. Vivisection was then practically unknown, and the only means men had of throwing light on mysterious deaths was by dissection. The bodies of the unfortunates who died in prison or the public wards of hospitals, were the only ones legally obtainable. As these were far too few to supply the demand, grave robbing was resorted to and big prices were paid by medical students and surgeons for dead bodies.

"One afternoon as Dr. Macdonald was leaving the lecture hall of the university he was approached by a well known purveyor of subjects and was told that a man had died suddenly the day before of what was supposed to be heart disease, and for a certain consideration the body might be obtained. After a few minutes conversation Macdonald walked on and the purveyor hastened off to attend to his ghoulish business.

"That night, just as the moon was rising over the tops of the Edinburgh houses, an apparently empty wagon, with two men on the seat, drove up to Dr. Macdonald's house. After a careful look about, one of the men gave a low whistle, and almost immediately a window on the ground floor was opened. Against this window the wagon was backed, and the two men lifted a long, heavy object, wrapped in a sheet, and passed it into the house. The sound of money changing hands followed; then the window was closed and the wagon drove away.

"In lifting the bundle the wrappings had been disturbed, and when Dr. Macdonald turned from closing the window the moonlight was shining on the pallid face of a corpse. Quickly he lit a number of lights, then drew a heavy curtain. From one side of the room he pushed a long table on which were dark stains, showing that it had been used many times before. On this he lifted his purchase and carefully examined it. It was the body of a man in the prime of life, and except that trigler mortis had set in and that every joint was like a bar of iron the man looked as though he were asleep. There were no signs of wasting disease. His face was full and except for his ghastly pallor looked as if it had died in life. It was evident the man had died suddenly, and heart disease was the doctor's specialty. From a chest Dr. Macdonald brought his instruments and glasses, his little basins and sponges and laid them out in order by the side of the corpse. The subject died of heart disease, and so the heart was his part to be examined.

"Just as the knife touched the man's breast Dr. Macdonald sprang back with a startled look. Was it possible that the eyelids had quivered? No; it was only some passing draft which had made the light flicker over the dead man's face; but still he would make sure. There was no pulse; everything proved that the man was dead beyond peradventure. Then he proceeded with his dissection. Slowly and carefully he removed the outer skin. Then two ribs and a part of the breastbone were taken out and laid aside. At last the diseased heart, which had been the cause of his death, was revealed. All this had taken time and the doctor was hungry. He put his instruments aside and from a closet produced a lunch, which he ate, throwing occasional glances at the body on the table. When he had finished he resumed his work. The heart, to be properly examined, must be removed, and this he proceeded to do.

"He cut around the great organ of life, and was about to take it from the body when he chanced to look up. Then slowly, and as if every movement was a physical torture, he straightened himself. The hair on his head began to rise, and his eyes were riveted on the face of the subject. The last time he noticed that face the eyes were closed and it was the expressionless face of the dead. Now all was changed. The eyes were opened and were glaring at him with a horrible expression of reproach. At the same instant the body on the table rose slowly to a sitting posture, and the stillness of the room was broken by a single whispered word, 'murder!'

"With his eyes glued to the mutilated form, Dr. Macdonald started back until he felt the wall behind him and could retreat no further. For fully two seconds those eyes glared at the doctor, and the air seemed to resound with the awful accusation. In that time he realized that the man had never been dead, and had known and felt every event of that horrible night. Then the mutilated body fell back. Shriek after shriek filled the house. The sleeping family, awakened by this dreadful noise, rushed down. They found Dr. Macdonald just outside his office door, with his arms stretched out barring the passage. 'Don't go in! Don't go in!' he shrieked, and then fell insensible. Before daylight the same two men backed their wagon against the doctor's window and the bundle wrapped in a sheet, was passed out to them; but Dr. Macdonald was delicious upstairs."

How To Get a Complete Record.
An earnest seeker after truth inquires of a contemporary: "Will you please tell me how to trace up a family history?" Perhaps as good a way as any is to get one of the family whose history you wish to trace up to run for office in a close district.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla contains no harmful ingredients, and is the best blood purifier.

Life's Recompense—Little Sister Ma wants you, Sammy. Where've you been? Sammy—Fishin'. Did you catch anything? Sammy (sadly)—Nothin' 'all. Little Sister (reassuringly)—Oh, but you will when you get home.
