How Girard Made a Man Rich.

Seeing a story about old Stephen Girard the other day reminded me of an incident that shows one of his peculiarities. Girard had a drayman who was a decidedly poor man. One day the drayman, who was an industrious, bright fellow, with a good many mouths to fill at home, was heard to remark that he wished he was rich. "What is that?" sharply said Girard, who heard the grumble. "O," said the man, "I was only wishing I was rich." "Well, why don't you get rich?" said the millionaire, harshly. "I don't know how without money," returned the drayman. "You don't need money," said Girard. "Well, if you will tell me how to get rich without money, I won't let the grass grow before trying it," replied the other. "There is going to be a ship load of confiscated tea sold at auction to-morrow at the wharf; go down there and buy it, and then come to me." The man laughed. "I have no money to buy a ship load of tea with," he said. "You don't need any money, I tell you," snapped the old man. "Go down and bid on the whole cargo, and then come to me." The next day the drayman went down to the sale. A large crowd of retailers were present, and the auctioneer said that those bidding would have the privilege of taking one case or the whole ship load, and that the bidding would be on the pound. He then began the sale. A retail grocer started the bidding and the drayman raised him. On seeing this the crowd gazed with an small amount of surprise. When the case was knocked down to the drayman the auctioneer said he supposed the buyer only desired the one case. "I take the whole ship load," coolly returned the successful bidder. The auctioneer was astonished, but, on some one speaking to him that it was Girard's man who was the speaker, his manner changed, and he said he supposed it was all right. The news soon spread that Girard was buying tea in large quantities, and the next day the price rose several cents. "Go and sell your tea," said Girard to the drayman the next day. The drayman made contracts with several brokers to take the stock at a shade below the market price, thereby making a quick sale. In a few hours he was worth $20,000.

Scalded to Death.

The following is from a Greenville, Washington county letter to the Hillsboro Democrat: An accident occurred last Saturday in the hills near Manning's mill, which resulted in the death of a little girl aged three years, daughter of a man whose name we have been unable to learn. It seems that the mother of the child was sick at the time of the accident and had told her little boy to make some brine to put over a lot of meat. After boiling the brine the boy poured it into a tub and left it standing for a few minutes, when the child, by a mis-atep, fell backwards into the scalding brine. The child lived until Sunday night, when death ended her suffering. The father of the child is at present engaged in building a house for John Bellinger, where the news of the accident reached him about noon on Sunday. He coolly said "by they must look out for things at home, I can't leave my job and climb up them mountains." And although informed that the child was thought to be dying, he did not go until the next day, when a neighbor brought him word that the child was dead. But we suppose all manner of cattle have a right to run on the range.
