Lindgreen and Robt. Cooper were in a fish boat sailing up giver and Lindgreen, who was sitting on a pile of netting in the stern of the boat steering, was struck on the head by the boom as the sail jithed over to the other side and knocked overboard. He came to the surface but overboard. He came to the surface but once saying to his partner "I am going down" and before Cooper could rescue the drowning man he sank out of sight. Mr. Lindgreen was married about two months ago to Miss Lanra Young and they have since been residing at Acme. The young widow is almost prostrate with grief over the untimely loss of her husand. Mr. Lindgreen has relatives at Astoria. The body has not yet been recovered.

ED. WRIGHT'S DISCOVERY.

The Great Hypothesis of Shrinkage. How It Developed From His Experience

About a year ago a car load, more or less, of lobster eggs, sent out here from the east to grow up with the country, was dumped at Cape Hancock and Shoalwater bay. The first fruits of the effort, broad meadow hardly less than a mile wide was a majestic river in which Wright was accustomed to bathe his Wright was accustomed to bathe his youthful person, and from which he drew with his juvenile hook and line "shiners" and dace of the average weight of from one to two pounds. The most perfect photograph could not have furnished a more truthful and vivid picture of his native village than the one he carried in his memory for half a century.

On revisiting the place this summer he was at once struck by the enormous was at once struck by the enormous shrinkage that everything had under-gone. The ancestral mansion had shrunk to at least one-half of its original size, and was now a small wooden cottage. The wide street had become a mere country lane. The imposing residences of judge Smith and of deacon Brown were not much larger than the Wright mapsion, and as for the Congregational were not much larger than the Wright mansion, and as for the Congregational meeting house, it had shrunk so much that, instead of holding the ten or fifteen thousand persons that Wright distinctly remembers to have seen within its walls on Thanksgiving day, it could now hold not more than six or seven hundred. Furthermore, the majestic river had become a mere brook, and the shrinkage of the meadow had brought it within a stone's throw of the house.

Such extensive changes as these natu-

Such extensive changes as these natu Such extensive changes as these naturally filled him with astonishment, mingled with the scientific desire to invent a hypothesis to account for them. Of the facts there could be no possible doubt, for not only did he possess a remarkably good memory, but also the skill in accurately measuring distances and magnitudes by the eye, has often challenged the admiration of his friends. There was a tremendous shrinkage in There was a tremendous shrinkage in land, water and buildings, and it was a priori probable that it was due to one and the same cause and the same cause.

Now, he knew that the gradual cooling of the earth was causing a constant shrinking in its circumference, but it was hardly probable that the rate of shrinkage should be the same over every eight-tenths of a mile N. E. by E. 34 E. square mile of the earth's surface. Evidently the rate of shrinkage at his native dently the rate of shrinkage at his native town lad been exceptionally rapid, and this explained the great changes which the front light of Walker's Island Bar Range. shrinkage in the size of the houses had kept pace with the shrinkage in the land, and that it was due to the same cause, namely, a gradual process of cooling, which is the concomitant of age, was a hypothesis which Wright lost no time in Follow Multnomah and Clatsop's Example.

formulating.
This theory is briefly as follows: Loss of heat in nearly all material substances is followed by reduction in size. The earth decreases in size as its internal fires grow less fervent, and buildings, whether of wood, brick or stone, must shrink, for the reason that heat, being a mode of motion, and the component parts of a house being immovable, the latter inevitably grow cooler the longer they remain at rest, and as they grow cooler they shrink. The process may, from reasons which we do not as yet un-derstand, proceed more rapidly in one derstand, proceed more rapidly in one place than in another, but it is every-where in progress. This theory enables us to understand why the ancients called the most remarkable of modern contributions to science, and the more one studies it the more it becomes evident that this hypothesis supplies a manifest want which nearly all men feel when, af-ter many years, they revisit the home of their childhood.

Agonizing, itching, burning, and bleeding Eczema in its worst sta-ges. A raw sore from head to feet. Hair gone. Doctors and Hospitals fait Tried Everything, Cured by the Cuticura Remedies for 86.

Cured by Cuticura

I am cured of a loathsome disease, eczema in its worst stage. I tried different doctors and been through the hospital, but all to no purpose. The disease covered my whole body from the top of my head to the soles of my feet. My hair all came out, leaving me a complete raw sore. After trying everything I heard of your CUTICUEA REMEDIES, and after using three bottles of CUTICUEA RESOLVENT, with CUTICUEA and CUTICUEA SOAP, I find myself cured at the cost of about $8. I would not be without the CUTICUEA REMEDIES in my house, as I find them useful in many cases, and I think they are the only skin and blood medicines. ISAAC H. GERMAN.

Raurning and Itching

Burning and Itching

I was sick in the fall of 1888 with a burning and itching so bad that in three weeks I was covered with a rash, and could not sleep nights or work days. Some dectors thought it might be salt rhoum (ecsema), and said they had never seen anything like it before. I received no help from any of them, or from any medicine that I could get hold of until I tried your CUTICURA REMEDIPS. After three weeks' use I was able to work, and kept getting better, until I am now entirely cured. I recommend them to all suffering with skin diseases, mend them to all suffering with skin diseases.

Most Intense Itching

I have used the CUTICURA REMEDIES successfully for my baby, who was afflicted with eczema, and had such intense itching that he got no rest day or night. The itching is gone, and my baby is carred, and is now a healthy, rosy-cheeked boy.
