Return of the "Corvina."
 The revenue cutter Corvina, returned yesterday from a cruise in northern waters.
 She brought four of the crew of the steamer "Wile West" to Seattle from Quilayate via Neah and Port Townsend. They were brought from the scene of the wreck overland to Quilayate, a distance of 20 miles, by the natives who had been dispatched to bring them to that point, as the Corvina could not make a landing on the coast in the rough sea and heavy weather that prevailed and Quilayate, was the nearest available port.
 The men are reported in good condition, comparatively, although their exposure and trying experience have left their traces. The engineer, H. Gulding, will return to his home in Portland. The other three, Frank Spike, Frank Wilson and Charles Norvellian, will remain in Seattle.
 Two of the crew still remain with the engines and boilers that have been beached, awaiting orders from Capt. Sparring. They are provisioned and can wait the arrival of Capt. Sparring, who is going to their assistance as soon as the weather opens so that approach can be made to the shore there, three miles from Destruction island.

The New Arrangement Between President Reid and the Railroad Directors.
PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL.
 Last Friday evening the new arrangement regarding the resumption of work on the railroad was whispered with the injunction not to publish it. The following is, however, reprinted from yesterday's Oregonian, and is given in confidence to our readers. They will please not say anything about it. It is private, and not to be given out to anyone.
 On his return from Astoria, Mr. William Reid, president of the Astoria & South Coast railway, was waited upon by an Oregonian reporter to obtain details of the action of the board of directors of the road at their recent meeting. He stated that a full board of directors, nine in number, were present at the meeting, and all worked earnestly and harmoniously together to determine the best course to be pursued in the interests of the city, and several propositions to that end were considered.
 A majority of the stockholders had intimated to the directors their willingness to cancel their shares of stock in exchange for the actual completion of the road to the Willamette valley, stating that they had subscribed their shares to give us a basis for that purpose, and especially to secure the building of the bridge across Young's bay, to connect Astoria with the mainland, without which these stockholders felt that the railway interests of Astoria were insecure should a competing city be established by the railroad-owners on the west side of Young's bay.
 In deference to their wishes the Astoria directors adopted a proposition which would carry out the stockholder's desires, rather than to borrow money for the present from outside sources.
 Accordingly, the directors unanimously passed a resolution agreeing to convey by deed to any person or corporation named by William Reid, all the company's assets of whatever character or description, including its terminal lands and rights at or near Astoria, in consideration of which Reid and others becoming personally obligated to give bonds in the sum of $100,000 to immediately transfer certain real estate of the selling value of $100,000, by deed to the various stockholders or to a trustee to be named by them in security for such bonds, which sum of $100,000 and real estate security are to become the property of the Astoria stockholders and divided among them pro rata, should Reid, in consideration of which Reid and others becoming personally obligated to give
