BUT FIVE MINUTES TO LIVE. Terrible Ordeal Through Which Mrs. Whelan Passed.

A story with all the interest and sus-pense of the story of Bluebeard's last wife is told by Mrs. Margaret J. Whelan in her superior court bill for di-vorce from James Whelan, says the Chicago Globe. From her marriage, August 18, 1888, until November 7, 1889, her story does not materially differ from the hundreds of similar tales. She was beaten and abused by her husband, who twice attempted to kill her with a knife. Once he cut her dress from her back as she was escap-ing, and again stabbed a neighbor who interfered to save her from abuse. She left him, but November 7th re-turned on his promise of better behav-ior. She entered the house and followed him to a room. Too late she noticed that the knobs of the door had been removed and their places taken by heavy staples, which were fastened with telegraph wires and padlocks. The terrified woman asked her husand what he meant to do, and he turned on her and, seizing her by the hair, dragged her to the door. "Your ninutes are numbered!" he exclaimed. "Pray now, for you have but five min-utes to live." She knelt or the floor, with her hands clasped prayer, and he opened a huge knife and flourished it above her head. The time was getting short, and Whelan turned to a shelf to change the clock to a more convenient place to watch the minutes as they passed. As he turned his back Mrs. Whelan sprang to her feet and leaped through the window to the street. She was seriously injured by her fall, but was cared for by neighbors. Judge Jamieon entered an order enjoining Whe an from in any way annoying his wife
